So popular is manual training becoming that the different classes in the Stephens center have become badly crowded during the past week. The boys are taking up the work with much enthusiasm. They were agreeably surprised when their instructors put them to work on the drawing boards and handling the T square, instead of being put to work with the hammer and nails the first day. The portable table to be used as workbench have been moved to the Harrison, Thompson and Holladay schools during the past week. Materials with which to furnish them have not arrived, but they are expected shortly. An endeavor will be made to have them ready to start classes in these centers by the first of next week. The workshop for the Couch school will be secured this week.

They escaped from the jail at Chemawa Indian school, but Al Scott and Jim McGee hardly had time to look around and size up the situation in Portland last night, when they were taken into custody at the Union depot by Policeman Barter. Both beat their way from the school by freight train, leaving there early yesterday morning. They were taken to the central station, they begged Acting Captain Hogeboom to give them something to eat, as they had not tasted anything since leaving the school. They are minors. They will be returned.

SUPREME COURT LIKELY TO DECIDE

GENERAL OPINION IS THAT BARRISTER CASE WILL EVENTUALLY BRING THE FEDERAL JURISDICTION OF WALTON GOING FREE ON TECHNICALITY.

While the state contends that the failure of Charles W. Walton to plead to the information charging him with murderously assaulting Policeman Nelson and with holding up and robbing Emanuel Johnson, the streetcar conductor, is not vital its action tends to show that it is disposed to look on the error as serious.

Mr. Johnson refused to sign the affidavit and an appeal was taken to Presiding Judge George. His decision was that the court and all officials must abide by the records. Clerk Johnson says he does not remember that Walton pleaded to the informations. Therefore the records cannot be changed. Several who were present in court at the time say they remember clearly that Walton did not enter a plea after the demurrer interposed to the information was overruled.

The case was the main topic of discussion around the courthouse yesterday. A motion of Attorney St. Rayner to dismiss the defendant from custody will be on the ground that his conviction was irregular and will raise two important questions, whether Walton has ever been passed on by the supreme court.

In opposing the motion the state will advance two main lines of argument. First, a motion of Attorney St. Rayner to dismiss the defendant from custody will be on the ground that his conviction was irregular and will raise two important questions, whether Walton has ever been passed on by the supreme court.

Both District Attorney Manning and his deputy, G. C. Moser, who conducted the case for the state, assert that no substantial right of the defendant was prejudiced by his failure to plead and that the testimony adduced and the verdict would have been exactly the same in case he had done so.

Two or three attorneys assert that if either of these contentions prevails a dangerous precedent will have been established. Few cases can be found in the law books bearing on the matter. Attorney St. Rayner will urge that Judge Cleland, in instructing the jury, erred in saying Walton had pleaded guilty. As Walton declared he was not guilty while on the stand, other lawyers say, it hardly forms a material point.

It is deemed practically certain that the case will go to the supreme court. The question which attorneys look on as the most important is whether or not the rendering of a verdict under such circumstances makes a new trial impossible. The state constitution provides that no man shall be placed in jeopardy twice for the same offense. Courts are said to have ruled that a man's life or liberty placed in jeopardy when the trial jury is sworn in. From this it is held that if the court should decide the failure to plead constitutes an error of substance and not of form, Walton could not be retried for either of the crimes of which he has been found guilty.

In addition, Attorney St. Rayner admits, in fact, boasts that he knows of the case, all along and trembled for fear it would be discovered while there was yet time to rectify it. He says he was so afraid the prosecution or the court would discover the error that he did not even tell Walton about it until after the first witness had been placed on the stand at the second trial.

EUGENE FOLK WILL SEE FAIR IN STYLE

Eugene, the home of culture and education, is also the home of an idea. Just who originated the idea, where and how it was conceived, is still a mystery and indeed the idea itself was intended to be a secret for several months yet.

Plans are being perfected by 30 of the most prominent citizens of Eugene for a unique way of enjoying the Lewis and Clark exposition at a winter rendezvous. They propose to erect in this city a temporary structure that will accommodate that number of people. The building will be erected at a moderate cost, but will have all modern conveniences and will be constructed in a way that will guarantee as much comfort as ordinary dwelling houses.

Those who are in on the deal propose to keep their families either here or at Eugene and to stay here themselves as long as business will permit. They will be enabled to spend in that way a greater length of time at the fair than otherwise without interfering with or neglecting their business.

The club up to this time has been confined to the original 30 members. No outsiders have been admitted, though many have discovered the cleverness of the idea and have attempted to "butt in." But they have been unsuccessful. As a consequence there may be many other clubs with similar purposes formed at Eugene.

It is assured that similar clubs will be formed in other cities as soon as the plan becomes generally known. It will be a means of saving considerable money to those who live in neighboring towns and desire to spend a great deal of time at the fair.

Residents of Portland, at least those who have learned of the proposition, are excited with the plan. It will avoid many perplexing situations, they say. "The people of Portland are always hospitable," said a Portlander yesterday. "We are glad to entertain, but it is likely that every home in the city will be crowded during the fair. The people of Eugene have taken the initiative and are preparing to entertain themselves."

PORTLAND'S FAIR IS TALKED ABOUT

HASTENERS MAKE ANxious INQUIRY FROM EVERY CORNER HOW THEY MEET LEWIS AND CLARK EXHIBITION WILL BEAT ST. LOUIS IN MANY WAYS.

C. F. Swigert, general manager of the City & Suburban Railway company, has returned from St. Louis and the east with a report that is very encouraging to those interested in the Lewis and Clark exposition.

"I have heard a great deal about the Portland fair," said Mr. Swigert, "and we will have a larger number of people here from beyond than is supposed. The people seem to be interested, generally, and every person I met who knew I was from Oregon asked questions about the exposition. Not only among travelers was this the sentiment, but prominent exhibitors expressed their interest and declared they were coming here to be represented."

The general criticism of the St. Louis fair," continued Mr. Swigert, "is correct. There is so much to see and the show is so scattered that it becomes disorienting. One starts out with the intention of taking it all in. Then the extent of it dawns on him, he regards a view of the whole as impossible and gives up after seeing the Pike. It is as Mr. Dooley says, 19 out of 20 go to see the Pike and that is where the West ends."

Portland, according to Mr. Swigert, will eclipse the St. Louis show for various reasons. There they have not the natural beauty that should surround an exhibition of the kind—no landscape or foliage. The locality is hot and dusty. The forestry building of the Lewis and Clark show will be so unique and interesting that it cannot be compared with anything at St. Louis, and the fair here can at least be seen.

"As a show, to see and enjoy, I believe Portland has the Louisiana Purchase exposition beaten by the proverbial town block," concluded Mr. Swigert.

INTOXICATED SAILOR IS THROWN FROM CAR

William McIntosh, chief cook of the steamer Joseph Kellogg, fell from the rear platform of a streetcar at Front and Burnside streets at 7 o'clock last night and sustained injuries the extent of which are not yet fully determined by the attending physician, Henry E. Hill. A police ambulance conveyed him to St. Vincent's hospital, where he was resting fairly well at a late hour.

Policemen Venable and Isaacs, dispatched by Sergeant Hogeboom in the ambulance, stated that the injured man was very drunk when he fell. He was too drunk to make any statement, or was unconscious. He was able to tell which "rest glasses" will help the tired eyes stand the strain and prevent actual disease.

McIntosh tried to board the car, which was on the lip of the Portland Railway company, and was refused admittance, at first. Friends spoke to the conductor and secured permission for him. When it started, the intoxicated man lost his balance and fell to the stone pavement, striking on his head. It is not thought he is seriously hurt.
