Wasco county has contributed its share of abused and neglected children to this society, and in all cases the final result has been highly satisfactory. Perhaps it will be fresh in the minds of many residents of Wasco county the case of the Gibson girl, aged 4 years, who was living with her mother in a dilapidated barn at the edge of The Dalles. The mother was one of the most abandoned creatures it is possible to imagine. Besides living an immoral life, she was a morphine fiend and it was thought administered the drug to the fiend, and at the time the attention of Judge Miller has completed his term the society was called to the case, he boat at Arlington, and will be taken supply would be so much diminished on his way home to Vancouver this only furniture in the barn was an old morning.
