tive of the Muslim Welfare House, told Sky News the attack clearly targeted Muslims, saying the driver acted deliberately and was not drunk or mentally ill.

“The driver of the van, said ‘I did my bit,’ which means he’s not mentally ill,” Kacimi said. “This person was conscious. He did what he did deliberately to hit and kill as many Muslims as possible, so he is a terrorist.”

But Kacimi said there was no need for the Muslim community to panic, because police and government officials have been “very, very supportive.”

“At this stage, we are calling for calm,” he said.

Monday’s attack hit a community already feeling targeted from the fallout from three previous attacks in as many months, all blamed on Islamic extremists.

Hate crimes directed at Muslims have increased nearly five-fold, according to British security officials, speaking on condition of anonymity in line with official policy.

Ali Habib, a 23-year-old student, said residents were upset that Monday’s attack wasn’t portrayed in the same light as other attacks across Britain.

“There has been an outpouring of sympathy for all the recent terror attacks but hardly a whisper on this attack,” he said.

“People are both scared and angry. Parents are scared to send their children to evening prayers. I don’t think people understand how much these attacks affect all of us.”

May attempted to counter that feeling, saying that police arrived at the scene within one minute, and that the incident was classified as a possible terror attack within eight minutes. The prime minister, who has been criticized for failing to show compassion to victims, traveled to the attack site within hours, and met with community and faith leaders.

“Diverse, welcoming, vibrant, compassionate, confident and determined never to give in to hate. These are the values that define this city,” she said later outside Downing Street.

“These are the values that define this country.”

The attack occurred outside the Muslim Welfare House, a small mosque with about 200 congregants. Nearby, evening prayer services had just concluded at the larger Finsbury Park Mosque, which was associated with extremist ideology for several years after the 9/11 attacks.
