a day.

The most interesting of the curies is a clock 180 years old, which Mr. Judd found in a Japanese curie shop. The clock is two feet long, about two inches wide, and one and one-half inches deep. Its mechanism is very peculiar. Instead of by a dial with hands, the time is told by an indicator that moves downward along the side of a strip on which are the figures from one to tweive, with the half hours also shown. The striking contrivance is in the weight. It must be wound up every twelve hours.
