 Declaring that Nelson, in addresses he delivered last Thursday at the University and at Oregon State college, had "built up an all but impassable social barrier" between Chancellor W. J. Kerr and the university "by his violent partisan and intimidating language," the faculty unanimously adopted a resolution demanding the resignation of the new president, only recently appointed by Governor Julius L. Meier.

NELSON DELAYS

Nelson, informed of the faculty action, issued a statement in Portland yesterday which indicated he did not intend immediately to resign.

"I shall be guided solely by my conception of what the public interest requires," he stated.
 More than 100 voting members attended the faculty meeting. It was announced that the vote demanding Nelson's resignation was unanimous. The resolution which demanded that the board president quit, also deplored the appointment of Dr. Kerr as chancellor.

"Discontent imbues the majority of the faculty," the resolution stated, "and not simply a small group, and is the inevitable and foretold result of the selection for chancellor of a man who was involved in controversy."
 Dean Wayne L. Morse of the University school of law, who attacked Nelson's stand in a ringing address last Saturday, and Dean James H. Dean Gilbert said the faculty action showed the educators at the university "are opposed to the

DEMONSTRATES AND LECTURES ON AUTOGIROS

Captain William T. Campbell, holder of the world's altitude record for autogiro flights, will deliver a lecture on the evolution at Willamette university Wednesday morning at 11:30 o'clock, and following the lecture will make an autogiro demonstration flight over the university campus giving the public a chance to see this type of plane in action. It was announced today.

CAPTAIN CAMPBELL

During the past 18 months, 450,000 students in schools and colleges located in 36 states have heard Mr. Campbell's lecture on the evolution of flying, the theory of flight, the theory of auto-rotation and the significance of present-day aviation.

During the eclipse of the sun which was visible in the summer of 1932 in New England, Harvard observatory used Mr. Campbell and the autogiro which he pilots, to make observations from a height of 13,000 feet.

Mr. Campbell recently spent two months at the Pitcairn Autogiro factory, studying auto-rotation, in conjunction with foreign and United States engineers. The significance of the autogiro to aviation is emphasized by the fact that in 1930 the Collier trophy was awarded to Harold G. Gatty by the president of the United States for his work in developing this type of flying machine. This year, Juan de la Cerva, the Spanish engineer who developed the autogiro, received the 1932 gold medal of Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

After leaving the University of Georgia, Mr. Campbell enlisted in the aviation corps and trained at Love and Kelly fields, Texas, as well as at the old Wilbur Wright field, Dayton, Ohio, where he was the first cadet to solo. Before the World war ended he had been placed in charge of flying at Love field, Dallas, Texas, which at that time was the most advanced course flying field operated by the government.

In the summer of 1932 at Boston, he climbed 20,400 feet in the autogiro which he is bringing to Salem.

Move to Send Local Man To Washington Launched At City Council Session

Started by a resolution from Alderman S. A. Hughes, and enlivened by fiery speeches from Dan Kellaher, interested citizen, and Aldermen H. H. Vandevort and David O'Hara, an argument over the city's water controversy was again the most serious matter before the city council last night. A move was set going whereby the city may send a man to Washington to represent it in the loan negotiations.

Acting on a tip in the Morning Oregonian of yesterday, Hughes sent in a resolution that the council ask the public works administration for a $950,000 loan for the purchase of the water plant of the Oregon-Washington Water Service company, this to be in addition to the $1,500,000 already conditionally approved by the PWA for construction of a mountain water system. The tip on which Hughes acted was that the PWA had approved a loan to a Colorado municipality for construction of a new power plant on purchase of the existing private plant. Heretofore the PWA has ruled—and it is one of the strings attached to the Salem loan—that loan funds could not be used for purchase of an existing plant. Apparently, said City Attorney Chris J. Kowitz, the PWA has broken away from this ruling.

After Hughes' resolution had been amended, on motion of Alderman F. E. Woodham, that the additional loan be asked for the purpose of "either building a new plant or buying the old one, it was adopted without opposition.

Hughes, speaking on his resolution, said it would obviate the necessity of selling Salem bonds at a discount to buy the plant. Vandevort got up and made an argument for sending a representative to Washington, declaring he had little confidence in trying to do business by correspondence.

Dan Kellaher, general Hibernian, took the floor in opposition to the city's method of going after a loan, and urged that it organize to get the full $2,500,000, the amount that was authorized in bonds by the voters of the city. He urged against the purchase of the existing plant, "Don't put up a dollar to buy junk," he said.

Kellaher read from a prospectus relative to California PWA loan projects, declaring that the chambers of commerce of various California cities had been forced into line by the sentiment of the people.

He criticized various organizations and the banks of Salem for failing to endorse the movement here, and saw what he considered the sinister hand of the Chase National bank underneath the whole proceeding.

Alderman Vandevort declared the city council had done everything in its power, and could do nothing else unless backed by stronger sentiment.

"Every time we do anything," he said, "the self-styled business men of this town drag us into foul." Alderman Hughes added that he had learned the business men of Salem had laid plans to start one suit after another in order to block the proceedings. Hughes said he had had a talk yesterday with Senator McNary relative to the possibility of getting a loan with which to buy the existing plant, and the senator had promised to send a night letter to Washington.

City Attorney Kowitz told the council that he and Hughes had met with Walter E. Keyes, attorney for the water company, to find out if E. C. Elliott, president of the water company, was making any headway in his visit to the Chase bank in New York. Keyes told the two, said Kowitz, that something could be expected from Elliott this week.

Alderman O'Hara backed Vandevort's plea for a personal representative in Washington. It was obvious, he said, that the water company is represented there. O'Hara contrasted the situation relative to the Bonneville and Baker dam projects and the Salem controversy. Without any assurance whatever from the people that "a single kilowatt of power from those dams will ever be used," he said, in face of the fact that the people of Oregon in the last election had acted "on the other hand," O'Hara said, "the people of Salem voted by an overwhelming majority for a municipal water project."

Because of the action taken by the council last night on the water issue, and the possibility that the city might build a new plant instead of purchasing the present one, City Attorney Chris J. Kowitz said that the city would press the litigation now in the courts. One of the cases is set for hearing in the circuit court next Monday afternoon.
