How it is now with them we cannot telly We were somewhat acquainted with the Adamses of Newburyport. The mother of our first wife Sarah Cobb Plumer was Hannah Adams. She was a big masculine looking woman. We saw her once take a big fellow, a six footer by the collar, drag him out a long sidewalk at the end of the house and pitch him headlong into the street. She was a holy terror. She was a cousin of Capt. Philip Johnson of Astoria. She was the daughter of a man called "Can-opy" Adams. I don't know why he was called "Canopy" unless because was called "Canopy" unless because everybody under the canopy stood in terror of him. He was a perfect Hercules in strength. DRESS SUITS FOR RENT.

If there is one thing in this world more than another that I have longed to possess, even for I had no idea that its society people were so hard up that they had to rent out their clothes to raise a revenue with. In less time than it takes to write it I found myself attired in one of the hamisomest broad-cloth suits I had ever laid my eyes on, much less my hands, and after putting up two dollars and signing an iron-clad receipt I started out to attend an afternoon lawn party. As I marched up Market street I felt for once in my life that I was the observed of the observers. Even the street-cars seemed to slack up as I approached and I am almost sure that I detected a smile on the face of the Lotta fountain as I passed by. Not knowing how soon I might be alle to hire another suit I concluded in justice to myself to try and secure some genteel situation while I was dressed up. Hastily running down the want column of the Examiner I discovered the following :

"Wanted-A first class reader to read two hours a day to an invalid. Apply to Miss Laffin, 768 Howard street."

When I reached the premises I found about 250 others ahead of me, but I manged to get near enough to make out the potice that was pined on the door and which read as follows: "Please don't ring-the patient is dead." I made up my mind at once that Major Adams was in town and had got in ahead of me with in ahead, and always kills those who are "Laffin" at him. Dennis Mud get left in his own mud Anybody that wants to be a angel and wear a starry crown, can be made one by applying to Major Adams. He kills or cures. Wonder whether when Denvis turned over them?

If our poetry kills fools it will surpass Shakes peare's and thin out Dennis.
