As a matter of psychological cu-During the year just closing, there riosity it was determined to produce, as nearly as possible, the portrait of the typical girl of culture. The process employed was based upon Francis Galton's experiments in photography. The camera was arranged, and the efeven sitters quickly took their places before wo. The sitters were so posed that their eyes exactly corresponded with two points marked on the camera, so that each face occupies precisely the same position on the negative. The girl with the most regular features was taken first and in the end there was developed a photograph showing the features common to all the sitters, but exactly resembling none of them. The result obtained was remarkable. The mystery of the camera is undeniably beautiful. With high brow, softened by fluffy waves of bair, deep-eyed, with rounded by flames.
