MANY WORKMEN.

Hill Brings Over 40,000 West for Railroad Work.

What is believed to have been the greatest immigration of its kind into the Pacific Northwest has been accomplished by James J. Hill in bringing in workmen on the Portland & Seattle Railway construction from St. Paul and the Eastern centers. Employment agents estimate on a conservative basis that 40,000 workmen have been imported to this territory since work on the North Bank road was commenced.

This great movement has been accomplished by offering free fare to the Pacific Coast. The object of course was to fill the construction camps along the Columbia, and the only reason that the Hill lines have kept the invitation standing and so many have been brought West is that the men desert after working a time, changing to some other line of industry. However, many drift back to the railroad work from time to time, and it is estimated that between 4000 and 6000 are now at work throwing dirt on the North Bank railroad.

Before the close of the season the management of the Portland & Seattle expects to be doing much better and to double practically the construction forces, for President Elliott of the Northern Pacific is quoted as saying that he expects to have 12,000 men employed on the work before long, when as much earth will be moved on the work as is being dug by the forces engaged on the Panama Canal.

Pacific Coast industries have felt the effect of this great army of men moved westward by the Hill forces for construction purposes. Probably there is not one of the great manufacturing interests in the Pacific Northwest that has not been helped by finding the labor market easier by the direct result of this great immigration. These men are largely Greeks, Austrians and Bulgarians from Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Paul and other Eastern centers. They are all available for the heavier work of Pacific Coast industries.

Sawmills are better supplied than last year at this time, the railroad camps of all companies have a large quota of men and the harvest fields, which are now sending fourth the annual Macedonian cry, are not likely to face the serious shortage of labor that has been the case in former seasons. In addition the wider use of combined harvesters, with which three or four men only are required to do the work that formerly required a hundred, promises to save the crops of the interior without using so many harvesting hands as heretofore.

However, there is work in all lines for all who want to work, and wages were never so good. Railroad construction pays from $2.50 up for common labor; railroad maintenance work pays from $1.75 up; harvest hands get from $2 to $4 a day between Portland and Pendleton, while logging jobs are to be had right now at from $2.75 to $3.50.

The supply of labor is expected to fall off somewhat from now until the middle of September. This is caused by the large number of industries that clamor for men during the Summer, when weather conditions are the most favorable for outdoor work. Harvest, fruit picking and packing, hop culture and curing, together with all kinds of outdoor work, demand an immense army.

There is a very large amount of city work just now, caused by the great building activity and the various contracting jobs about town. Grading of new property, new buildings, street railway lines, sewers and pipe lines, and many other activities take care of a very large number of workmen.

There has never been so much railroad construction in this state as just now. One or two carloads of men are being shipped out every day by local employment agencies to the various camps in all parts of the state. Next winter, the completion of many of the railway projects now on foot, including the Portland & Seattle work, is expected to liberate a very large number of men and it is a question what they will find to do until next summer.
