

School Notes.

By S. E. NOTSON, Co. Supt.

On the 12th inst., I visited the school in District No. 2. Mr. James G. Wolfe is at the helm here. Eleven pupils were present, and all were working diligently and appeared to be doing excellent work. A new porch has been built at the front of the building, which adds to the appearance and convenience of the building. New window shades, a new stove, a thermometer, and some window boards have been provided since my former visit. Several pupils were absent on account of measles, but it is not thought that it will be necessary to close the school.

After leaving this school, I drove up over the hills to Gardane. As I neared the timber line, I passed up above the fog, which had filled the canyon below. There I had a magnificent view. To the right, Mt. Hood and Mt. Adams, glowing in the sunset light, pierced the western sky. To the north, the sea of fog stretched away across the Columbia Valley and covered the portion of Washington usually visible from this point. The fog resembled the ocean after a storm, before the waves become quiet. The next morning, I visited the Gardner school, which is in Joint District No. 33. Here I found Miss Bessie Williams and thirteen pupils at work. The school is doing good work. A new dictionary, a new stove, new window shades, a new pump, and window boards for each window have been provided since my former visit.

As I returned from Gardane, I enjoyed the sight of a royal battle between the south and north winds. When I reached a point on the hills where I could see over the Columbia Valley, I saw the fog scattering before the south wind. Great dark caverns appeared in the canyons, where the wind was lifting the fog. The front of the fog was gradually receding. After a time, however, the front of the fog appeared to pile up. Then it began to advance. There were places where the south wind prevailed for a time, but at last a general movement forward along the front of the fog brought it over the hill-tops. The south wind could not stop the advance, but it caused the fog to rise in streamers and columns and assume a very angry appearance. Mt. Hood and Mt. Adams kept two spots of sunshine above the fog. It was a very interesting sight.

The school board convention will be held the evening of December 29, at 7 o'clock at the Court House. In some counties the districts pay the expenses of every member of the board, so all can attend. It is hoped that every school officer who can attend will do so, for matters of vital importance will be taken up. All friends of education, whether school officer or not, are invited to attend and take part.

Room For Doubt.

The cuckoo clock had just chirped the half hour before midnight, and the girl in the parlor scene was weary. "Mr. DeBore," she said as she vainly attempted to strangle a yawn, "I heard something about you the other day that I'm sure is not true." "Indeed!" he exclaimed. "What was it?" "I heard some one say you were an easy going chap," she answered.—Chicago News.

Realistic. The Author—Well, how did you like my play? The Critic—Oh, it was very nice. The Author—Didn't you think the church scene realistic? The Critic—Intensely so. Why, a great many of us actually went to sleep while it was on.—London Tit-Bits.

Her New Role. Patience—Do you remember my sister who was on the stage? Patience—Oh, yes. "Well, she's married." "Oh, got a speaking part at last, has she?"—Yonkers Statesman.

A Jewel. "Are you satisfied with your new maid?" "Very. She's too old to get married and too fat to wear my things. So I think we'll be able to keep her."—Detroit Free Press.

Thoughts on Christmas.

Don't put off until tomorrow the holiday gifts you should purchase today.

Be thoughtful of your friends; be beautiful to the friendless.

Let it be a bucket of coal for the needy rather than a buttonhole boutonnet for self.

Suppose we make it fewer all; pers, more substantial for the pastor this Christmas.

There's holiday cheer enough for all if the prosperous lend the unfortunate a willing hand.

Get the grouch out of your system and the smile on your countenance. Beam, don't bemoan.

Let's be old-fashioned. Shop early, hide the presents—and get some real happiness out of anticipation.

There isn't any tough turkey. If holiday happiness prevails the turkey's are bound to be the best ever.

A cheerful spirit will lift the burden of a heavy heart. There's plumb joy in doing the little things which count.

But the increased cost of living will not decrease the usual amount of good things for the youngsters' stockings.

Late shopping makes a hurried, stupid Christmas. Buy early and be ready for the day of good will to all.

Forget self in promoting the happiness of others. Even a kindly word declares its dividend of cheer on Christmas Day.

It isn't charity to be thoughtful of the needy—it's plain cheerfulness bubbling over in sympathy with the true spirit of the holiday season.

The cranberry is a sour little thing, but a pinch of sugar works wonders in its preparation. Sweeten your disposition by shopping early.

A turkey for every dinner bucket and toys for every little chap; good cheer for all and a groch for none. Times have been good; be good to the times.

Isn't it wonderful the amount of satisfaction there is in the gift of a toy to a Christmas kiddie or a comfortable chair to the old folk. Gee, but it's great to give.

Really it isn't the full pocketbook. It's the full heart. Cheerfulness is honesty of purpose refined. Be beautiful with your good wishes and little helps to holiday happiness.

Since even a penny gift will promote a dollar's worth of pleasure, imagine the good will and gratefulness stowed away in a little basket of groceries or a small load of heater chunks. Don't grouch—give.

Selfishness and steam heat conspire to make a cheerless Christmas. A quart of cranberries, a stalk of celery and a plump pullet will change that. But don't send your card along with the bundle.
