OWING TO STAGE DIRECTIONS

The facts connecting the miserable experience of young Symonds as an actor were these: He was hired to play in a stock company, and one night was called upon almost at an hour's notice to take a part in a play he had never seen, his services being required in consequence of the illness of the man playing it. The part given him to study was in manuscript. The man who had previously played it was an eccentric person and had written in a lot of ridiculous stage directions. Symonds was amazed to find them in a serious part, but supposed them all right, and at evening appeared with his lines and business pretty well learned. But so little time did he have to prepare for the performance that a rehearsal was impossible. A large and fashionable audience assembled in the theater. The curtain was rung up and the play commenced. Soon Symonds went on. His first speech described the misery of his poverty-stricken mother at home. After it he danced a little break down. The audience was amazed, and the other actors on the stage dumbfounded. But Symonds knew he was following his stage directions. Presently he had to refuse a proposition to commit crime. He did so in grand style and then took off his hat and jumped on it. This extraordinary proceeding created a sensation. The manager came and stood in the wings and suffered anguish. After his next speech, a defiance to his tempter, he crawled under the sofa. That just set everybody wild, and the manager danced up and down in the wings, and swore he'd kill Symonds when he came off. After a touching love scene with the heroine, Symonds proceeded to stand on his head and howl, and the audience howled too, and the manager shrieked to him to come off; but Symonds didn't hear, and proceeded. He spoke his next speech with such impressiveness and magnificence of manner that the audience was, in spite of itself, hushed into silence, and at its close was about to applaud, when Symonds yanked off a boot and hurled it at the head of the leader of the orchestra. That settled it. The leader, who was badly hurt on the jaw by the boot, came up over the footlights, and the manager rushed on from the wings, and the way they bounced Symonds about was fearful. He made a big fight, and was still at it when the curtain was rung down. After they were parted, Symonds explained, and showed his part as a justification for his conduct. But the manager would except no excuse, and, going before the curtain, said: "Ladies and gentlemen, occasionally a natural-born idiot, with a phenomenal faculty for making an ass of himself, is sent into the world. Such a one has inflicted himself upon us to-night. For my part, I have endured the agony of the damned while watching him, and I presume you've had enough of his donkeyism. Therefore the performance is closed."—Boston Post.

Fibred Bank Note Paper.

The fibred bank note paper on which American legal tenders, national bank note currency and government bonds are printed, is made at Dalton, Mass., in an old mill, whose existence dates back to colonial times. If you should stop at the old paper mill, with proper credentials, you may, perhaps, be allowed to handle a sheet of the crisp fibre paper, or take a peep at the pulp press, where, as the wet, grayish pulp is pressed between heavy iron cylinders, bits of blue and red silk thread are scattered over its face and silken ribs laid on its surface. You may go beyond into the counting room, where each sheet as it comes from the drying room is carefully examined and counted and then returned to the paper cutter to be divided into smaller sheets. If you trace this paper still further you will find that from the cutter's hands it passes again to the counting room, is separated into little packages containing 1,000 sheets each, the amount recorded in a register, and then packed into bundles and stored in fire and burglar proof vaults to await shipment to the United States treasury. From pulp room to vault the precious paper is watched and guarded as carefully as though each sheet was an ounce of gold. Its manufacture is one of the greatest secrets connected with the government's money making.

From the vaults of the paper mill at Dalton to the guarded store-rooms of the treasury at Washington is but a journey of two or three days. In the spacious vaults of the treasury building, among gold and silver and copper and nickel coins, bullion, paper currency and official records, you will find thousands of packages of the bank-note paper that is manufactured at Dalton. It comes in little iron safes, such as are used by the Adams Express Company, and each package and every sheet is carefully counted before the manufacturer and express company are relieved of further responsibility. The paper that arrives to-day may be in the treasury store-rooms for years, or it may be sent to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to-morrow, to return in the course of a month's time, a legal tender or bank note.—New York Sun.

The Quirks of the Law.

I was in partnership with a man named Butler, and one morning we found our cashier missing with $5,000. He had dragged the safe and put out. Well, I started after him and caught him in Chicago, where he was splurging around on the money. I got him arrested and there was an examination. Well, all the facts were brought out, and the defense moved that the case be dismissed, as the prosecution did not make out a case in the name of the firm, and that if there was a firm the copartnership had not been shown by any evidence before the court. To my astonishment the court said the plea was O. K., and dismissed the case. Before I could realize what was up, the thief had walked off. Well, I followed him to St. Louis, and there I tackled him again. I sent for my partner and made a complete case, going for him in the name of the Commonwealth and Smith, Butler & Co. Well, the lawyer for the defense claimed that the money being taken from a private drawer in the safe was my money exclusively, and that my partner had nothing to do with it; that the case should be prosecuted by me individually and not by the firm. The old "bloke" who sat on the bench wiped his spectacles, grunted around awhile and dismissed the case. Away goes the man again. Then I got another hitch on him, and tried to convict him of theft, and the court held that he should have been charged with embezzlement. Some years after I tackled him again, and they let him go. Statute of limitation, you know. Well, I concluded to give it up, and I did.—Salt Lake Tribune.

Prices for Poetry.

In some reminiscences of Longfellow, Mr. Samuel Ward, the lobbyist, chiefly describes the service he was to the poet in securing him on several occasions remuneration for his poems. He sold the "Skeleton in Armor" to Lewis Gaylor Clarke, of the Knickerbocker Magazine for $50, being thirty cents a line, although Clarke said he could not afford to give more than $25. Thirty years after he got an offer of $5 a line from Bonner, of the New York Ledger, for the "Hanging of the Crane," accompanied by a check for $1,000. Longfellow returned the check, thinking he could do better with Osgood, the publisher. Bonner threatened legal proceedings, but through the intervention of Bartlett, his lawyer, the whole business ended in Bonner's giving $4,000 for the poem—$1,000 going to Ward himself. The Cornhill Magazine once paid Tennyson three guineas a line, but Bonner paid Longfellow (and Ward) the equivalent of four. In the course of the interview between Bartlett and Ward, the lawyer paid the following tribute to his client: "Although I am Mr. Bonner's legal adviser, he sometimes goes off at half-cock without consulting me. As in this case his lawyer's advice cost Mr. Bonner $3,000, his disposition 'to go off at half-cock' is hardly to be wondered at."

Judge Brady, of New York City, sat vigorously down upon the nonsense that a man who shoots another, that the doctors fail to cure, is not responsible for his death. Sindhram, the cold-blooded wretch who murdered his landlady, and who for a time was anxious to die, has since changed his mind, and is now fighting hard for a new trial. Among other things he pleads that his victim received unskillful medical treatment. Judge Brady has refused to recognize such a plea, laying down the rule that "the person who by an unlawful act creates the necessity of medical attendance must be held responsible for its results, as being among the consequences of his acts."

Two men who had a suit in court in St. Louis, finding it was getting too expensive, agreed to run a foot race, the winner to be entitled to the money which was at stake. The lawyers are to be charged an admission fee, and the runners are making bets with the lawyers, the winner to be entitled to the betting money. So it's the lawyers instead of the clients that are to pay for the fun this time.

Among the arguments in favor of refusing to build a tunnel between England and France is cited the disobedience of a French engineer to blow up the tunnel under the Vosges mountains because it was not necessary to destroy such finely constructed work. The Germans seized the tunnel, got possession of the line, and the capitulation of Sedan followed.

A Brooklyn young woman said people condemned suicide for being immoral, wicked, and all that sort of thing, but as for her she considered it very ill-bred. It was like going to a party without being invited.

The people of Kansas, under the forestry laws of that state, have planted 93,000 acres in trees. The cottonwood is the most abundant, as it grows the most rapidly. About 6,000 have been planted in black walnut, and will make a handsome return in eight or nine years.

Peruviana Bitters.

Children's Analyzer. What you need for Constipation, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, and all stomach troubles. Price 10 and 25 cents per bottle. Sold by W. E. Deane.

Peruviana Bitters.

The Count Cinchona was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1638. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruviana Bitters, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1642, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona, in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Incas. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take its place. It efficaciously cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, by restoring the natural tone of the stomach. It attacks excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both alike. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruviana Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroys. We guarantee the ingredients of these Bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order to Loeb & Co., agents for Astoria.
