A babe of twenty-seven brand new lawyers was turned out by the supreme court at Salem last Monday.

Mike Quinn writes from Knappton, New Zealand, asking that he be remembered to his Astoria friends, and stating that he will be in Melbourne, Australia, next month.

Boil down all concerning politics that you've heard or read during the present campaign, and you'll find it amounting to just this, "You're another."

Absent Astorians are dropping back one by two. Dr. A. L. Fulton who has been revisiting the banks of the mighty Missouri, arrived home last evening.

I. W. Case returned last Thursday evening from Minneapolis, Minn., where he represented Oregon on the occasion of the late session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F.

When his official station takes a free ride he goes along to keep it company.

At two o'clock this afternoon Ben Worsley will sell the property on the corner of Main and Squemoqua streets, formerly occupied by Mrs. Quinn, comprising the building, lease and store fixtures.

Hon. F. J. Taylor returned last evening from a judicial circuit of eastern Oregon. He was most favorably impressed with that section of the state. He holds an extra session of court at Hillsboro, next month, and goes from there to Oregon City.

There is a scarcity of amusement this fall, and prospect of its continuance this winter. Astoria is noted for the possession of a local talent, both musical and histrionic. Isn't it about time to organize and have another home dramatic society this winter?

This little globe of ours is getting to be so covered with means of quick and cheap communication, that a passenger can be carried from Liverpool to Astoria for $50 via Cunard Line and N. P. R. R., in better shape and time than a king could command a century ago.

The Eugene City Register, a clean-cut, square-toed, eight-page weekly, is receiving a large and desirable amount of advertising matter. It is published by Messrs. Hodson & Moran, desiring commendation for their enterprise. The paper is a bright one, and talks loudly for Lane county.

A stormy day on land and sea was yesterday succeeded by a stormy night. The wind blew in fitful gusts and the rain fell heavily. At midnight came a fall, the clouds parted and the stars shone out. There was but little doing along the docks and a comfortable fire-side was the favorite.

The duty on the steel rails for the Oregon Pacific railway has amounted to about $17,000. According to the Standard, a proposition was made by this company that if the duty was remitted they would improve the line to the extent of $200,000. The treasury informed them that he had no authority to make the change.

A few days ago County Superintendent Higgins set aside a portion of district No. 1, forming a new school district, to be known as district No. 25, and the citizens of Uniontown, wishing to have the benefits of a school as soon as possible, are making preparations to put up a suitable building. Col. Jas. Taylor has donated suitable grounds, and the district will soon have a new school-house.

There is an individual in the city who has all the characteristics of a first-class crank. He calls himself "Doc" Hawkins. He is a loud-mouthed, ranting nuisance. His only capital is wind; his only creed is notoriety, and any cause or creed he advocates is the worse for his endorsement. He is a loud-mouthed, ranting nuisance. RECLAMATION OF THE OCEAN BEACH.

An Interesting and Probably Successful Experiment. The work now in progress on the beach in the vicinity of Point Adams light house has occasioned considerable inquiry, owing to its novelty and evident value if successful, and with a view to noting its advance, an Astorian representative visited the scene of action in the early part of this week.

The primary purpose of the work is to cover the sand with a vegetable growth that will hold it firm and prevent the constant drifting and formation of hills and hollows, that are gradually encroaching on the light-house reservation and threatening to cover it up.

So far the work has been satisfactory. The material used is mainly a species of ribbon grass called oryza. This grass has leaves about an inch in width, and grows from eighteen inches to two feet in length. Its stalk below the surface has numerous eyes, from which shoot several sprouts that spread in all directions to come to the surface, and form a new stalk with sets of leaves, thus interlocking in a network of roots and holding the sand down. This grass is gathered on Ilwaco beach by a man named Andersen, who gets twenty cents a bag for the grass plants. Each sack contains about 5,000 plants, and is carried to Fort Stevens. So far, about a quarter of a million plants have been set out. The men at work have begun a hole within the southwest corner of the forty-acre light-house reservation, and have planted a strip about 1,000 feet wide up the beach. One man makes a hole with a spade, another drops in a stalk of oryza, and covers it, and so the process is repeated, the stalks being set from a foot to eighteen inches apart each way. They immediately take root, and grow luxuriantly. Last Tuesday the wind blew 57 miles an hour, within a very few miles as hard as it ever blows there, and the comparatively slight impediment that the young grass offered to the gale proved sufficient to prevent the usual drifting and advance of the dunes. Beginning at high water mark and advancing eastward to the timber, the little clumps of grass present a singular appearance. By next spring, it is confidently expected, that what was before a strip of sand and desolation, will be a surface of smiling verdure, as solid and unyielding as an emerald lawn.

Beside the grass there is another agent used in the reclamation of the ever moving sand in the shape of a peculiar pine found on this northwest coast only at the Seaside. This is the piñon insignis, or Monterey pine, a hard, black, resinous tree the bark of which is not affected by the wind. A large number of these, from four inches to a foot in height, have been set in serpentine curves along the beach, and in time will constitute a beautiful avenue for delightful sea-breezes. Pines of this species set for the same purpose in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, in 1871 are now

FROM SIXTY TO SEVENTY FEET HIGH. The pines being set out at Point Adams are only removed a distance of fifteen miles, are thoroughly acclimated, and will, presumably, grow with equal vigor and rapidity. In that park 1,600 acres of desolate beach have been reclaimed in a manner similar to the plan here adopted. In Golden Gate Park were used lupines, Honoia knot grass, piñon insignis and acacias. The lupine and knot grass are here represented by the oryza, which is thought to be equally valuable on account of being found peculiarly adapted.

The work looks easy enough, but those in charge say that a great deal of judgment is necessary in so disposing of all the appliances that the best practical results are attainable. The first work of this kind in the United States was that heretofore alluded to at San Francisco. The second was on a strip of wind-blown waste between the Dalles and Wallula Junction which the O. R. & N. Co. had sown with wild rye, willows and cotton-wood; the work, more especially around John Day's station, being a complete success. The work under discussion is the third of the kind, and should it be the success of both corporations. Some of the Navigation stockholders are adverse to the lease to either of the Pacific roads, being convinced that their interests will be best secured by retaining independent of both.

A GREAT AND ENDURING WORK.

A Complete History of Western North America. Mr. Ashley Bancroft, who has been with us a few days, says that he feels under great obligations to the people of Astoria for their courteous attention and consideration extended to him in his labor of collecting data for Mr. H. H. Bancroft's historical works of the Pacific states.

He expresses wonder and surprise at the enormous amounts expended annually in the manufacturing interests, and of the great importance of this place, and anticipates a rich harvest in gathering facts and figures relating thereto. He is now carefully progressing in his work.

That the interests of our well favored section may be properly placed in history, as well as the experiences and reminiscences of those who have laid bare their arms and helped to hew out the history of our northwest, every assistance should be given him.

It is gratifying to learn that as H. H. Bancroft proceeds in his historical series the press, critics and scholars everywhere vie with each other in their expressions of the great value, absorbing interest and high literary execution of his works. We are informed that no volume thus far published, not even those telling of a past age and a past civilization, nor those picturing anew the early discoveries, nor the ones detailing the most striking epochs that has taken place on this continent—the conquest of Mexico—not the one on the states of Mexico, whose close proximity to our country makes its history of more than usual interest, nor even the volume on the early missions of California, attracted so much attention from the press, or have been so widely read and so eagerly acquired for as the first volume of the "History of the Northwest Coast, 1542-1800," which appeared in July, being preliminary and part of the History of Oregon, Idaho and Washington, Idaho and Montana, and the History of British Columbia." The second volume of this same, bringing the history of the same section down to 1851 will appear this month. These two volumes, which the volumes devoted to Oregon exclusively, which will appear at the proper time, will give a complete and up-to-date history of the Northwest Coast. Of the volumes mentioned above it takes but a moment's perusal of the preface and a glance over the varied table of contents to see that the work is of a high order. The authorities quoted show the rich sources of Bancroft's material and an index in the second volume will ensure the great historian of the world being in the placing of these volumes on the early history of this State in the hands of intelligent and progressive men throughout the world. Bancroft is doing this State a service its citizens can never repay.

This work, to the pioneer as a representative man, possesses a peculiar charm; its strong and vigorous style, its lucidness, chronicled in history by a man of scope and genius acknowledged to be equal to Prescott, Gibbon, Macaulay, and the great historians of the world, and an enterprise is deserving of the country's sympathy. The projector can have no sordid motive; a very limited amount of sagacity may perceive the utility of perusing the history of our own country, and the history of the world, and the character. The history of the work, as well as its contents is of great interest, embracing a vast historical research and attention to the minutest details, and its philanthropic aspect stands unique in the annals of the nation.

The Projected O. R. & N. Lease.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 3.—The Press' New York special says: The project of the Northern Pacific, looking to the lease of the Oregon Railway and Navigation line, has not, according to the best information, been relinquished but only deferred. It continues to be discussed. The Oregon Navigation Company demands an 8 per cent. guarantee after five years, but the Northern Pacific objects to paying so much. There will probably be a compromise. For two years the guarantee will no doubt be 6 per cent. For three years 7 per cent. and for the remainder of the term 8 per cent. The dividend of that day the day was stopped because the weather had so sultry grown that coats were shed and sweating brows were mopped. And long before the evening of that day the Betsy May was snugly in Milwaukee moored, while many vessels quite as strongly built as she went down the night before with all on board."

A SAILOR'S TARY.

How the Betsy May was Saved. "The story-telling hour had, come when men, not wearied with their four hours' watch, were sitting in the dimly lighted fore-cabin and quaffing sundry swallows of hot Scotch. For even with a captain strict and mate severe, the jolly sailors always find a chance to bring on board their ship at port that which 'twould give their hearts to leave behind. And now the sailors who had been on watch the early part of this October night were anxious to be entertained by tale of woe or stories of some gallant chief-tain's night. All hands now called on old Benjamin, or "Salty Ben," as he was chiefly named, for Ben could spin a yarn at any time and as a dealer in rummage was justly famed. Pressing the bottle to his thirsty lips a long, a loving pull took Salty Ben, and then he placed the flask away beside the bed, beyond the quiet reach of other men. "Twas in the fall of '76," said Ben, and all the others in their eagerness to hear drew close to their stools so as not to interrupt when further on, and each took a parting sip of his good cheer. "I shipped on board the schooner Betsy May, a three-and-a-half-ton vessel, and strong was she. We loaded her with coal on Buffalo creek, and in a howling gale we put to sea. With waves and storms we battled long and hard, but when eight days had been out at sea, our sailors listening o'er the wind-ward bow, could hear the siren sound at Skillingalee. And soon the Beavers and the Foxes came, and behind our vessel came a great and strong sea. We looked for the land marks as the shore grew near, the surging deep arose the Northern side of Manitow. Down past this side of the Indian's Cove we dashed with white spray flying high in air, and Captain Jackson standing on the quarter deck, watched for the land marks as the shore grew near. And soon he saw the proper point and passed, so with both hands to shelter his wide mouth he loudly to the sturdy steersman called, 'head this good ship southwest by south, half south.' And now the wind was square abeam the ship mounted high the surging sea, and land risen. We braced the main and fore-sail and dropped the peak to scandalize the mizzon. Colder and darker grew the night, and every man at his post swept o'er our gallant ship left, as it washed the ropes and spars, and deck, a coat of white, like canines in a dip. And soon our boat was groaning 'neath a load of ice that lay upon the deck and clattered up each mast, until she lost all semblance of a ship, and from each breast all rays of hope were cast. The crisis in the trip had come, and every man was ready to strike a brilliant deal. He called the crew upon the quarter-deck, and thus did to the shivering crowd appeal: 'With your good help this vessel can be saved and sailed between those two Milwaukee piers, but every man must do his duty, trust in a higher power, and yield not to fear. Now, who of those on board this ship can give a reason why the great United States should have a change in general government, or alteration in the regular tariff rates?' I can give the great reason, 'Bonnavin,' why both these things would do the country good. 'You can do no such thing,' said Jack McGuire, for Jack was always in an argy-bargy mood. And then a row began. The crew returned the question, 'Why not?' and those who knew the least of politics were loudest in expounding common law. The clamor that they made attended upon the sailing, during the midnight gale, but as it did the temperature did higher get, and soon the ice's grip upon the ropes and spars began to fail. And down upon the ice deck, descending from the rigging, the ice began to crack and crumbling scattered o'er the gleaming rail. And those who in debating took no side were set to trimming as they do on land, and ax and spade did execution good, wielded by this erstwhile despairing band. So o'er the monkey-rail and tail-rail, too, and over all the other rails about the craft, great cakes of loosened ice were fired into the surging billows and soon swept aft. Now as each chunk of ice into the lake was thrown, the vessel higher from the water raised her head, and soon as trim as this good ship to-night the Betsy May toward Milwaukee sped. A daybreak wind and sea had calmed a bit, and argument upon questions of the day was stopped because the weather had so sultry grown that coats were shed and sweating brows were mopped. And long before the evening of that day the Betsy May was snugly in Milwaukee moored, while many vessels quite as strongly built as she went down the night before with all on board."
