SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1890.

Everybody work for the incorporation.

No town charter will ever be written that will please everybody. The proposed charter for Newberg comes as near it as any that will ever be drafted.

A BILL to incorporate the town of Newberg, House Bill No. 85, was introduced by Representative Laughlin of this county.

Newberg is a town of four or five hundred inhabitants. It is the seat of one of the best schools in the State. It is the trade and shipping center of the Clatsop valley.

Germany has sent an officer over to inspect our harbor defenses, and he will probably go back and say that we have none. It may be that some time some great power will prosecute us.

Why not ask the Legislature to offer a bounty on the manufacture of beet sugar? asks a farmer. Almost the whole Willamette valley is adapted to the growth of sugar beets.

Eight hundred girls, employees of leather manufacturers, in New York city, are out on a strike, the scale of wages demanded by the working women's union having been refused.

The subscribers to a newspaper ought to be proud of its fearless independence. Even when it differs from them, in opinion they ought to have enough of genuine American love of fair play to be, at least, not displeased.

What grand resources Oregon has, with her fertile fields and never failing crops, her salubrious climate and absence of thunder, lightning, cyclones, blizzards and smog-stokes, her magnificent water power, sufficient to turn the wheels of thousands of factories, her illimitable wealth of timber, her wide expanse of grazing territory to give the great wealth of herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, her vast and unexplored mineral resources.

THE TOWN OF NEWBERG.

The remarkably fine weather of the past month has been improved to the utmost by the energetic citizens of Newberg in doing work which had been planned to be done at the earliest opportunity.

One who knows rather well about Mongolian pheasants, says they are propagating very freely and seem abundant in the small range they inhabit. The protection the law affords has been sufficient to encourage their increase.

CORRECT HABITS IN SCHOOL.

There is an innate principle or force which leads us to do with ease and growing certainty what we do often. Upon the proper development and right tendency of this force rests substantial character.

Into almost every school there come boys and girls to whom the matter of arithmetic or English grammar is of far less importance than that of habit.

Unfortunately the child whose teacher has a dull appreciation of bodily training, and unappreciation of the teacher whose school is filled with lounging boys and girls, whose gawky movements show little care, and whose ill-cultured tastes seek solace in the tobacco pipe, the cigarette or the chewing gum.

Limited space will allow us to notice only some of the more important habits that properly come under the attention of school training, and should have the special care of the teacher.

I. Habits of Obedience. In both the natural and spiritual world there are certain fixed laws, and whatever be the undertaking, full success depends upon obedience to some one or more of these laws.

II. Habits of accurate Observation. There are few things in which we differ more than our habits of observation. Two persons pass over the same road; one sees almost everything along the way, the other sees very little, or it may be that both see very much the same things, but while one has clear and definite ideas of the objects seen, the ideas of the other are much confused.

Students who carefully observe, not only acquire definite conceptions of external objects, but their ideas obtained by reading are more nearly correct. As a rule, the accurate observer is the more interested and reliable thinker.

III. Habits of Industry. Activity is a law of nature, and, as such, is perhaps nowhere more exemplified than in the busy make-up of the child. When this natural desire to do is taught to go in proper lines of systematic work, labor becomes easy and the performance of duty a pleasure.

(Miss F. A. MORRIS, Press Superintendent.)

What is thought of Mason Long at home; We cheerfully bear witness, that Mason Long, since abandoning his former course of life, now more than nine years, has been an upright man, a consistent Christian and, as we believe, an efficient worker in the cause of morality and reform.

It gives me satisfaction to say to any who are interested, that Mason Long, the bearer of this letter, is all that he professes to be—an honest earnest worker for the Christ who saved him from his darkened past.

To my brethren in the Ministry: I have heard Bro. Mason Long two evenings since. His first lecture was on "Social Evil"; his second, "My Conversion"; and I wish to give you my testimony that these lectures are invaluable to us in our work.

There is a mysterious power about him which cannot be explained. The more one sees of him the stronger grows the impression that he is earnest and sincere. He does not retreat in the old beaten path and preach the fear of hell and damnation as an incentive for a better life.

It was at a protracted meeting in a colored church and Brother Smith had been holding forth at some length and with a loud voice. Presently the worth pastor's patience was exhausted and he broke in with: "Brother Smith, you jest; shut up now and give Brother Jones or chance to talk to the Lawd! He knows him better'n you do."—Burlington Free Press.

Mrs. Gable—What's the matter with my husband? Doctor—Nothing, except that he needs a change. I prescribe opiates and rest. "Shall I give him the opiates at once?" "O, the opiates are not for him; they are for you."—Philadelphia Record.

It has been well said that "conviction not coercion" is the policy of the W. C. T. U.

Science that has divested the world of spoons will yet banish the hallucinations of the elgar, the habesheb, opium and chloral drams, the madness of alcoholic drinks.—Francis E. Willard.

An exchange gently intimates that more towns die from the want of confidence on the part of some men and lack of public spirit, than from the rivalry of neighboring towns or adverse surrounding.

A nervous looking man went into a store the other day and sat down for half an hour or so, when a clerk asked him if he could do anything for him. He said no, he didn't want anything. She went away and he sat there for half an hour longer, when the proprietor went to him and asked him if he wanted to be shown anything. "No," said the nervous man. "I just want to sit around. My physician recommended perfect quiet for me, and he says above all thing I should avoid being in crowds. Noticing that you did not advertise in the newspapers, I thought that this would be as quiet a place as I could find, so I just dropped in for a few hours' isolation." The merchant picked up a bolt of paper cambric to brain him, but the man went out. He said all he wanted was a quiet life.—Peck's Sun.

Dr. R. W.
