WHAT OF OUR TIMBER?

"What shall we do with our timber?" asks a man who has a claim in the Upper Deschutes valley. "Is the country going to develop so we can make use of our own timber, or must we sell out to the syndicates that seem to be willing to hog the whole thing?" continues our correspondent. "The government has withdrawn so much land in this section from entry that it discourages general development and it looks to me as though we small fry would have to take what we can get now or stand a good show to lose the whole."

This view is too gloomy. It is that of a man who has little faith. Our timber lands are all right, if the government has withdrawn a large area in the Upper Deschutes valley. Remember, it is only the government land that has been withdrawn and there is comparatively little of that left. Nearly all the desirable timber is in private hands.

It is probably true that few of the people who have taken timber claims will be able to make profitable use of their own timber. The tendency of the time is to bunch the claims into large holdings so as to be worth the while of capital to come in and develop the resources of the country. This is a legitimate movement. Our forest or other resources will not develop themselves. Development will not come from the people who sit around and growl because others are trying to do something.

It has been demonstrated that capital is not safe coming into this country unless it comes in quantity sufficiently strong to carry its ends regardless of the people who stand ready to sandbag it. This is not a pleasant thing to say, and we should probably fight if anybody else should say it of us. But it is the ugly truth and to look the matter squarely in the face may help us to mend. Because the same spirit has been observed in other localities will not help us. We ought to make it easier for those who come here with money and energy to apply to development of the native wealth of the country. Of course they will make money here; it is folly to expect them to come here and lose their money. But when they make money the rest of us will also prosper.

Unquestionably it would be better to have a lot of smaller diversified industries established here than to have a few fat syndicates rule us and drain our resources. But we haven't the money necessary to develop those industries and we make it decidedly unpleasant for those who bring in the money. Therefore, we need not expect capital to do much with our timber until it can come in shape to protect itself.

In this view of the matter the dealer in timber lands is a necessary factor. Through him the individual holdings can be combined in groups large enough to be self-protecting, and, therefore, attractive to large capital.

Of course, there will be all kinds of schemes for getting claim owners to part with their holdings. In general it may be said that it is unwise for claim owners to tie themselves up for unreasonable lengths of time without some advance payment. It is pretty certain that the value of timber land will increase as time passes and the man who gives an option for a year on his timber claim simply makes the other fellow a present of one year's increase in value, whatever that may be. The man who wants such an option ought to be willing to pay something for it. At the same time an option for a few months, in order to give time for getting a bunch of claims together, cruising them and arranging for their sale to the capitalists who cannot afford to fool with individual claims, is not unreasonable.

It is to be observed that the use, not the mere possession, of our valuable forest resources will open up this country. That use will not come from a numerous band of proprietors. They are not equipped for making use of the timber. There is a big work for the middlemen here before our industrial hopes are realized as to our timber.

Why does Congressman Williamson lambast Secretary Hitchcock on his forest reserve policy and then express surprise that his recommendations for land office or other appointments receive no attention? Congressman Williamson would not grant many favors to a man who should ridicule him. It is true that our statesmen should be made of sterner stuff, but they are not. If this forest reserve policy is a pet hobby of the administration, as is alleged, the hostile criticism of congressmen will not win the appointments that are so precious.

And now the Oregonian seems to have joined the company that thinks local consent essential to a proper forest policy. Locally the people don't give a rap for the future; they want to get their hands on the timber and convert it into cash now. Let the future look out for itself, they say. Not so with responsible officers of the government, however, who must, if there be a spark of patriotism in them, see that the general and permanent, not merely local and temporary, welfare of the country is promoted. Local, selfish interest is frequently against the general good.
