COUGH

three months of age, died.

The Centers for Disease Control said pertussis symptoms begin with a runny nose, sneezing, low-grade fever and mild cough. The cough gradually becomes more severe, and after a week or two, the second stage of the illness begins. That stage is often characterized by violent coughing spasms ending with a gasp or "whoop" as the patient tries to get air. Sometimes the bursts of coughing results in vomiting. This stage of the illness may persist for up to 10 weeks.

The health department said the best way to protect yourself and your family from the disease is to get vaccinated.

Pertussis is a required immunization in Oregon schools, but the disease is making a comeback. In 2012, the number of reported cases in Oregon reached the highest annual count since 1953.

just a mile south of Dayville, burned about 65 acres.

But the storm sparked fires elsewhere, too.

One was touched off by lightning Sunday night, south of Mount Vernon.

The Harper Creek Complex fire was burning an estimated 321 acres on private land on June 30, according to Shilo Burton, public affairs specialist for the U.S. Forest Service in John Day. Roughly 10 residences had been threatened, most along Harper Creek itself.

The blaze has been confirmed as lightning-caused and Burton said dozers had cleared a line around the entire fire.

The Hog Creek Fire burned roughly 30 acres and the Luce Creek Fire grew to 25 acres, and were considered to be part of the larger fire complex, but had been nearly extinguished by Tuesday.

But that's not all.

Meredith Thomas took this photo Sunday by Dayville looking towards Aldrich Mountain. She said one of many strikes she captured started a fire she reported.

The Jones Canyon Fire, at 400 acres, continued to expand about 12 miles northeast of Monument. It was burning through grass, brush and juniper in the old Monument Complex. Evacuations in the area were coordinated by the Grant County Sheriff's Office

In addition, the Smith Hollow Fire, at 21 acres, burned in grass and brush near Fossil. Some sparks were even closer to city centers. Lightning started about four or five small fires near the city of John Day, near Antelope Lane. They burned about 20 acres of private property near numerous structures, and fire crews worked to contain them quickly due to the value of surrounding property.

Additionally, the north slope of the Aldrich Mountain Range had four fires reported June 29 in the former Thorn Fire area, the largest of which grew to roughly 11 acres

The Sunday thunderstorm knocked out power overnight to more than 500 homes, mostly in the Dayville and Mount Vernon area, with some in John Day.

Firefighters will continue to battle the fires and the heat itself. The fire danger rating across the Malheur National Forest is high. Public use restrictions are in effect on public and private lands and utmost precautions are urged during Fourth Of July celebrations.

He said he didn't have the desire – or the money – to open a dispensary. He did, however, have fears that he would be run out of town when he tried to open his small paraphernalia store.

"Surprisingly, we really haven't gotten much of that," said Freeman.

The process for getting a business license was simple. There were no people blocking the doors or harassing customers on his first day. Nearby business owners have been polite.

A John Day police officer did fine a person leaving the store, he said, after the officer found marijuana residue on the customer's pocketknife.

"That sort of stuff is over though," said Freeman. "With everything else that's being fought over (in the marijuana debate), I don't think a store like this is the most important," he said.
