

THE COAST MAIL.

SATURDAY, June 14, 1879.

About to Close.

The protracted and expensive extra session of congress, which was forced upon the country by the democratic party, is soon to adjourn.

The session has been one of marked and extreme political rancor, and the heated discussions which have taken place, have done much to arouse the feelings of fifteen years ago, and to awaken the distrust of the thinking men of the country as to the purposes of these professed reformers.

The following, taken from the Athol, is a seaman's opinion without a particle of exaggeration, in regard to the natural advantages of Cape Gregory.

Congress having appropriated a sum of money for the purpose of creating a harbor of refuge on the northern coast, where vessels could run for safety and find shelter during heavy winter gales—also keeping in view the wants of commerce, and the natural outlets of the country—I, being one of the many seamen on this coast for whom Government intends to build this harbor of refuge, therefore I will say a few words about it from a seaman's standpoint.

That commerce needs a sheltering harbor there is no denying, and one that can be made available at an early date. There are many places putting forth claims for harbor of refuge; the most of them have no advantages—no natural advantages—and would be more likely to prove a place of destruction to the unfortunate vessel that would have to run for it.

Under the north face of Cape Gregory the light makes the form of a half-moon, with a distance of nearly two miles from the lighthouse to Coos Head. In this light there is nowhere less than 45 feet of water at mean low tide, with clear bottom and good holding ground. This place is now a safe southeast and south anchorage, in proof of which several steamers have at different times anchored there and sailed with safety during violent southerly gales; but as the wind on this coast always veers from southeast to southwest and west, it would then leave vessels exposed. Extending up from the cape in a north-northwest direction for a distance of half a mile is a narrow reef, and on this reef as a foundation that would afford protection from all heavy gales; and by such improvement the entrance to Coos Bay would be brought within the shelter and protection of the break-water, thus rendering all of that large body of water available as a harbor, and giving to Southern Oregon an outlet for her products, a harbor for her commerce, and to the world at large a seaport second to none on the Pacific Coast.

Revival in Business.

From all parts of the East come news indicating a general revival in business. The cotton and woolen factories that have either been suspended or running on short time, have generally resumed work to their full capacity, and the prices and demand for raw material have correspondingly improved.

A dispatch from Kingston, N. C., dated the 5th instant, has the following: A fatal shooting affair occurred here to-day, growing out of an alleged seduction of a young lady of highly respectable parentage.

The Modoc Independent says: Henry Pritchett tells us that a few days ago while traveling on the plateau north of here he discovered some human bones protruding through some rocks, and his curiosity being excited, he went to work, and after removing the rocks, discovered the remains of a human being, together with an axe, pistol, table knives and forks, and in fact everything belonging to a camping outfit.

The Independence River-side says: The district court, at the last session, granted a decree of divorce and separation of property to Mrs. Woods from her husband. The parties have been living in Marion county, opposite Buena Vista. From all accounts Woods must be a brute. His wife attempted to escape from him more than once, but he always prevented it. The last time she concealed herself near the landing to take the boat.

In the time of Julius Caesar, Lake Fucin, situated in the Apennines, about 50 miles south-east of Rome, was a great inland sea. It received the rainfall of a very large district, and was constantly varying in extent, frequently destroying the laborers of the tillers of the neighboring soil.

We take the following from the Astorian: Front the Japan papers we learn that a mermaid was caught on the coast, near Tano-mura, Tosa, on the 27th of April. A creature of this description was taken four or five years ago; it was called by the natives "Ingon-nigo." The one in question was long. The head is like that of a man, the eyes, ears, nose and mouth being well proportioned. The forehead is covered with hair, and the teeth are like those of a man. An attempt was made to preserve it in spirits, but it had begun to decay, and it has therefore been dried.

Oil Upon Troubled Waters.

Since the days when Franklin performed his well known experiment on the tempest-tossed pond, stilling the angry waves with a spoonful of salad oil, producing a smooth, if unobscured surface by the incredibly thin film thus formed, accounts having been from time to time published of vessels in danger of the sea, repeating this experiment on a large scale.

We had the hardest passage I ever made, without any exception. On October 13th and 14th very bad weather with heavy seas, and on the 15th a hurricane from N. E., and we had to run. I think the vessel would have foundered if we had not to. I got two oil bags over the stern, and found that they kept the sea from breaking over the deck, and the vessel, but once or twice then the sea was so rough as to run up of the track of the oil she took it on the forward house and deck so heavily as to stagger her, and for a few moments I could hardly tell whether she would float or not.

A MARRIED woman of Salem attempted to cut her throat with a razor, one day this week, but after making one slash she abandoned that mode of execution, and dressed the wound.

The Independent says: In conversation with several gentlemen who were intimate with the late James T. Fay we learn that Mr. Fay often talked of the mutinies of his life, and once declared that when he became tired of life he would end it.
