of oil to the acre. Mr. Todd says he is cutting the mint before it blossoms when it should be cut after it blossoms, but he says if he had irrigation he could double his yield and get a second crop, while without irrigation he will get only one crop. As it is now he has to cut early to save what he has. All the oil produced by Mr. Todd on the coast is sold to one man. That man in the past two years has purchased $60,000 worth of oil from Mr. Todd's brother in Michigan.

The soil and climate of Oregon are well adapted to mint. Wherever the native mint grows the domesticated mint will grow, and while the native mint will produce some oil the domesticated mint will produce from three to four times as much.

The greatest expense in mint raising is in the first year. After that all there is to do is to cut and distill. Mr. Campbell says there is no more work nor expense in distilling than there is in baling hay.

Oregon mint will stand indefinitely—Mr. Todd says 25 years at least. In Michigan the average life is three years on account of the mint freezing out. Another beauty about the crop is that so far neither here nor in Michigan or England has there been discovered a pest that works on the crop.

Both Mr. Campbell and Mr. Todd are enthusiastic over the mint prospect, but both agree that the great drawback is the lack of irrigation. They say the yield could easily be doubled with irrigation. Mr. Campbell made the statement that on the nine acres, if he had irrigation, he could make a good living for himself and family.

The oil is now worth $1.25 a pound which is extremely low on account of the European war. The average price for the past ten years has been $3.75 a pound. The cost, taking a ten-year period, is not to exceed 50 cents a pound, so a splendid profit is seen even at $1.25 a pound, the present ruling price.

After oil is distilled it is put either in cans or bottles and does not deteriorate, but on the other hand gets better the longer it is so kept, so if the price is not satisfactory, it can be held indefinitely.—Oregon Grange Bulletin.

FUTURE OF THE MINT INDUSTRY IN OREGON

By J. W. PIXLEY

Ninety-five per cent of all the peppermint used in the world is produced in four counties in Indiana and Michigan. A. M. Todd of Kalamazoo, Michigan, a brother of O. H. Todd of Eugene, has 4000 acres of mint under cultivation, is a millionaire many times over, and has made his fortune out of the mint industry. Mr. Todd was a visitor in Eugene a couple of weeks ago and said: "There is no discount on your mint or on its quality; all you need is irrigation."

Two miles north of Springfield on the Dugald Campbell farm is to be found a nine-acre field of peppermint. O. H. Todd and Mr. Campbell are trying it out and are now cutting the mint preparatory to distilling. The peppermint stalks are cut with a mower, raked with a hay rake and allowed to cure until nearly dry, or until the leaves will hang on the stalk.

The distilling is a very simple operation. Two stone tanks, each seven feet high and five feet in diameter, some tin water pipe and a galvanized iron boiler are the equipments. The cost of a still to handle 60 acres of mint is between $300 and $400.

The mint is loaded on a rack, the same as hay and is hauled to the still and pitched into one of the tanks and packed down tight, after which the wooden cover is put on and fastened. The steam is then turned in and kept on until all mint smell is gone, which takes from 15 minutes to half an hour. When steaming the steam is carried from the tank through a five-inch tin pipe over which cold water runs constantly. From this pipe is goes thru several other pipes each smaller than the preceding one. This condenses the steam and it comes out a liquid composed of oil and water. The oil comes to the top and is skimmed off. This is all there is to it. Mr. Campbell says the process is so simple that any child could operate the still. The second tank is filled while the first is being steamed.

The best peppermint oil in the world comes from a small section in England near Michem. The quality of the Oregon oil compared with the Michem oil may be seen by the analysis which shows the Michem oil to contain 55 per cent of menthol, the Oregon oil 52 per cent and the Michigan oil 35 to 37 per cent.

The Michem oil sells for double the price of the American oil in the markets of the world and it is the hope of the Oregon raisers soon to receive a better price for their oil.

Mr. Todd is interested with Mr. Campbell and is also interested at Lebanon, West Stayton, Albany, and 25 miles down the Columbia from Portland—in all 60 acres.

Mr. Todd says the crop on the Campbell farm he estimates at 35 pounds.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.
