An incision was made and a large quantity of pus discharged. The gland was removed, or as much as could with safety be taken out. For ten years I wore a little piece of cloth about an inch long in my neck to keep the place open. O LOWING IS A good prayer for prosperity. The fruits of virtue never become over-ripe.

A dead lighthouse is worse than none at all. Service is the real splendor of our civilization.

He who thinks rightly of the Savior cannot think lightly of sin. The temptations that do us harm are the ones we consider harmless. The Fatherhood of God ought to mean the filial obedience of man.

Nothing makes a downler pillow at night than a good deed in the day. We are all willing that God shall lead us in the way we want to go. That which is material can possess no means of measuring the spiritual. They who live on the heights catch the earliest as well as the latest sun. The more a man is like the Divine Master the more manly he will be. If you are one of sin's votaries you will certainly be one of its victims. Almost the only good deeds the angels remember are the ones we forget.

A dozen high caste Chinamen, attaches of the Pekin delegation, were appointed to carry the gifts, which were too rare and fragile to be intrusted to a delivery wagon or to less tender hands.

The procession of gift-bearing Chinamen was halted at the gate by a guard, who insisted on enforcing the rule that nothing except personal effects can be carried out of the grounds. None of the astonished foreigners could underthe astonished foreigners could understand what was said, and some pushed their way past the guard. He summoned help, and in a few minutes the excited Chinamen were surrounded by about fifty uniformed officers. A messenger was dispatched to the Administration Building for the Chinese interpreter employed there, and when he arrived the guards and police explained that they had stopped his countrymen because they seemed to be stealing a lot of valuable stuff.

The interpreter meant to calm his kinsmen by telling them they were suspected of stealing, but he had no sooner thrown his light upon the situation than the gift bearers began to smash their burdens on the pavement and against the foundations of the buildings. Ivory fans, costly marbles, inlaid ornaments, metal filigrees, carved bronzes, and even brocaded silk gew-gaws were smashed, twisted, battered and torn in a jiffy. The Americans looked on in astonishment, making no attempt to stop the slaughter, but when it was all over and the interpreter had satisfied the authorities that no theft had been committed he was asked to explain the strange behavior of the Chinamen.

"That way I forget, see? Here I make mistake, too. In China you say a man thief he break up stuff. That way show he thief not, see?" Hundreds of dollars' worth of gifts were destroyed by the carriers to show that they had not stolen them.

Official Couldn's head. Cornelius Vanderbilt is a student of the American of fifty or sixty years ago. Mr. Vanderbilt's researches have brought up many striking instances of the crudity of the American of the past, when every one chewed tobacco and men wore paper collars instead of linen ones, and now and then he tells a story of those days.

"In 1855," he said recently, "a Vermont shopkeeper came to New York for the first time. He was sitting one day in a railroad station waiting for a train, and while he waited he chewed tobacco and spat on the station wall.

"An official soon bore down on him. "'Look a-here, old man,' said the official, 'don't spit on them walls, You ought to know better than that.'

"'What's the matter with you?' said the Vermonter. 'Don't that sign there say not to spit on the floor? I guess you can't read, stranger."
