COLUMBIA GORGE HOTEL, NAME CHOSEN

The Columbia Gorge Hotel is the name selected for the new resort hotel, arising on the site of the old Wau-Gain-Gain resort, by Henri Thiele. The name was suggested by a small daughter of Judge Jacob Kanzler, of Portland. Hundreds of suggestions for names were mailed to Portland by local folk who are taking an interest in the hotel.

Crews are now completing the pouring of concrete in forms for the basement and first floor of the new hotel. The second and third stories will be frame, finished with a fireproof steel-work covered with stucco.

COON BELIEVES IN NATURAL BRIDGE

T. R. Coon, formerly president of the Hood River Pioneer Society, expresses a belief in the existence of the Bridge of the Gods, which is a mooted question among scientists. Mr. Coon, who is spending the winter in Portland with his family, says:

Not far from Memaloose island lives Joe Stahl, who was personally acquainted with Frederick Balch, author of "The Bridge of the Gods." I once asked him: "Joe, do you think there was a bridge at the Cascades a long time ago, such as Mr. Balch tells about in his book?" "Oh, no," said Joe; "white man he write um book. He tell um big lie. He catch um hiyu chickimium. My fader's fader, he no see um. No bridge."

And then my good Indian friend laughed the bridge out of existence. But Mr. Balch fully believed there was such a natural bridge, as he often talked with me about his literary work. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Balch and would go him one better. It is probable that there were other bridges, for the bluffs of lava rock on opposite sides of the river match up perfectly, especially near Lyle. The molten lava was poured out like so much batter over the landscape and the river has cut its way through, and often under, the hard crust, which in time would fall. At Memaloose it appears to be the remains of such a bridge. The Indians have a story about a big dam at that place above which the salmon could not go. To remedy this difficulty the fish god was appealed to, who took the matter under advisement. So, when the time came for the salmon to go up the river, they were instructed, when nearing the dam, each to pick up a stone and strike the dam at a certain place. This onslaught had the desired effect, for a hole was broken through, and the salmon have ever since passed up the river. As proof of this, the Indians point to a small lake which nestles among the willows on the east end of Memaloose island, at the very hole punched by the salmon, which is now called Lake Lenora.

Now, Memaloose is only one of several islands lined up directly across the river. In low water one of these islands is a natural bridge under which one might float in a small boat. This shows that lava rock has a tendency to break away from the under side when acted upon by water and frost. I suggested that these broken spans be retained. Let the white man build a highway bridge over these islands. Mrs. E. B. Hewett, whose home is nearby, has often said that "some time there would be a bridge at Memaloose."

Now let The Dalles and Hood River meet each other halfway and push for the fulfillment of Mrs. Hewett's prophecy. The Yakima highway can reach the Columbia river best at this point and all towns on the river would share equal advantages and all of the tourists could cross one of the "Bridges of the Gods," and pause awhile at Memaloose.

WOMAN'S CLUB NEWS

The Woman's Club is active in finding homes for several distressed local families. Two cottages have been secured from the Hood River Canning Co. for the relief of poor. The club has provided all the city's poor with food and warm clothing.

At a program, following the business meeting Wednesday of last week, Mrs. Louise Boyden read a paper, "What Will the Women Do With the Franchise?" Mrs. L. R. Aplin gave humorous readings. At the club's regular session on Wednesday, January 13, the program will be arranged by Mrs. J. W. Sifton.

Mrs. William Munroe and Miss May Davidson, members of the legislative committee of the Woman's Club, will visit Portland tomorrow to attend a meeting of fellow representatives from various women's organizations of the state to formulate a program for legislation to be sought from the legislature, which assembled at Salem Monday.

The local women will attend a number of social affairs to be tendered the visiting club women.
