Real estate dealers in Medford must hereafter pay an annual license of $50, according to an ordinance passed by the council Tuesday night.

It's a Boston reformer who has sprung a new one. He wants a law passed to bar all liars from voting.

By far the most serious blow that has yet been delivered by the supreme court of the United States to organized labor was given when that tribunal announced its decision that labor organizations were liable to damages for boycotts against manufacturers engaged in interstate commerce.

Talk of deadlocking the Republican national convention in order to defeat the nomination of Secretary Taft received a setback when President Roosevelt remarked that if "they deadlock that convention to defeat Taft, they will get me."

John Mitchell, president of the United Mineworkers, when asked in regard to the rumors to the effect that there had been inaugurated during the recent Mine-workers convention a movement to indorse the candidacy of certain aspirants for the Presidency of the United States and other political offices, stated that so far as he knew there was no foundation for these rumors.

The Seattle Exposition bill went through the Senate by a practically unanimous vote. Burkett, who threatened to do all manner of things to defeat it, made a vicious attack and thundered loudly for half an hour.

J. N. Smith made a flying trip to Albany to secure an affidavit from James Powell declaring that Senators Fulton had no connection with the paying of $1500 to Representative Smith, during the legislative holdup in 1897.

While Joaquin Miller was sheriff of Grant county in the early days when the county included nearly all of Eastern Oregon, part of Idaho and flopped over into Utah, here and there he accumulated, among other trinkets and trophies, a real Indian name. It is as follows: "Broken-Off Arrow Chief of Four Tribes and Three Tepees With One Squaw in Each Tepee. For short the Indians called him Old Chief Broken-Off Arrow."
