The University Appropriation bill has been given the support of the Republican party in Oregon by the insertion of the following plank in the state platform. "We commend the University of Oregon and the Oregon Agricultural College to the support of our people, and we deplore the calling of the referendum upon the appropriation bill for the maintenance of the University. We believe that the State of Oregon should support a first class university and to that end we urge upon the voters of the state the importance of sustaining the action of the last Legislature, whereby an annual appropriation of $125,000 was made for the said University of Oregon. We pledge our unwavering support to this measure."

"Dairy cattle were never so scarce as at the present time, not only in Oregon and the northwest, but all over the United States as well. I know of no more profitable opportunity than is offered by the present shortage in the farmers of this valley than to engage in the exclusive business of raising cows for dairy purposes." Such is the opinion of the State Food and Dairy Commissioner Bailey who says that the dairying interests have suffered a serious check in development by reason of the short sighted policies in vogue among farmers and stock raisers.

A dispatch from Manila states that a big gold strike has been made in the Islands. Natives, Americans, "forty-niners" from the states and Australian pan washers are rushing to the district. Two hundred ounces of pure gold have been shipped from the mines controlled by Manila capital mainly and the rumors of rich surface deposits of clear metal have caused an unprecedented excitement. It has been known for some time that gold in good quality and quantity was obtainable from surface veins near the Benquet district.

Colonel Sam Parker, his son-in-law, Prince David, of Hawaii, and John Baker, were passengers on the Siberia, which recently arrived from Honolulu. The distinguished visitors have come to the States for the purpose of hunting bear in Washington and Oregon, and have brought with them enough guns and ammunition to wipe out every bruin in both states. In the party, attended by two maids, is the little princess, Kapiolani, five years of age. She will not participate in the bear hunts.

Lincoln, Nebraska has started the "daylight" saloon plan, a new experiment in the anti-saloon movement. The excise commission issued the order which permits thirst emporiums to remain open only between sunrise and sunset. This will close all the saloons at 7:30 p. m. The liquor people will resist the order in court.

THE MAN WITH THE RED BEARD.

(Original.) It was in the wildest part of New Mexico during the wildest part of that region's history that a powerfully built man with a red beard and steel gray eye was walking along the main street of G. Hearing a step behind him, he turned quickly, drawing his revolver at the same moment. A greaser was about to plunge ten taches of steel into the red bearded man's back, but the latter was too quick for him and dropped the knife with a pistol ball covering the hand with blood. In a moment the street was full of greasers. They seemed to pop up from every corner. They surrounded the man with the red beard, knocked him down and had the life nearly kicked out of him when the sheriff came along and took him to jail. There he was in the hands of greasers, who put him in irons and tortured him in every possible way for three weeks, then getting tired of him, turned him loose. The red bearded man wandered northward—legs, arms and head in bandages—till he met a circus. To the manager he said: "Goin' south?" "Heckon." "Stop at G?" "Yes. G's on the date book." "Want a hand?" "We need one or two more men to put up and take down the tents." "I'm with you." The red bearded man worked well, notwithstanding his bruises. The circus men called him Redbeard. They found it necessary to stand together while in that region, and the shout "Hey, Rube!" was frequently given. When some one of their number was attacked by greasers he would give the cry, and every circus man would at once lay about him, breaking as many bones of male citizens as possible. There were an afternoon and an evening performance at G. The evening show was crowded with greasers, about every person in the town being on hand. During the day Redbeard had collected a lot of stakes and poles of various kinds and piled them outside of the main tent. He was not observed saying much of anything to his comrades, nor did they say much to each other or any one else. There was that dogged look on their faces that portended a storm. Among the audience was the greaser who had tried to knife the red bearded man and several men who had tortured him while he was in jail. He spotted them. The show was over, and the audience was leaving the tent when Redbeard, his beard looking redder than ever in the big light that illuminated it and his steely eye darting fire, leaped upon the pile of improvised weapons he had collected and, filling his lungs with air, gave one long wild shout: "Hey, Rube!" Every man connected with the circus made a dash for the pile. There were tentmen in ordinary apparel, there were ostlers in high boots, there were negro minstrels in burnt cork and there were riders in spangled tights. Every man of them seized his cogdell, swung it in the air and brought it down on the nearest greaser. The women and children scurried away like hens and chickens to coop through a storm of wind and ball and lightning. Some of the greasers had their knives and pistols with them, but they had no opportunity to get together to make a united fight. Wherever they attempted to strike they were beaten down by a shower of oaken stakes. Redbeard seemed to be saving himself for special objects. The first of his old enemies he espied dodging about in the melee was the sheriff who had arrested him. Redbeard made a dive for him, swung his club high in the air and brought it down on the man's skull. He sank like a steer in a slaughter house. Then came the turn of the greaser who had attempted the knife. Redbeard found him on the ground where he had just fallen, tripped in the melee, and jumped upon him with a pair of boots alone heavy enough to stun him. In another moment the greaser's head was a jelly. Lastly, Redbeard attended to his jailers. One he held on a flaming torch used to light a peanut stand. Another he poked with an iron pointed stake. His thirst for revenge was unsatisfied till he had settled his account with every one of them. When the affray was over there were a score of bodies on the ground, all of them greasers, either dead or badly wounded. There were others who had either been carried away or had been able to drag themselves off the field. The remainder had fled ignominiously. The manager, realizing that the affair was an unusual one, acted accordingly. He did not fear a rally that night, but he dared not go farther south to return through G. To return by any other route was impracticable, so he concluded to go directly northward. Before dawn everything was packed in the wagons, and the show turned away from the scene of Redbeard's vengeance. The men of the company formed a rear guard under the direction of Redbeard, who as a fighting man had won their entire confidence. They were followed for a short distance by a few greasers, but so few that, realizing the futility of interfering with the retreat, they soon gave it up and returned to G. As to Redbeard, as soon as there was no longer use for his military service he left the company to go no one knew where. Since the fight circuses have kept away from that region unless well fixed for defense. Nothing so incensed the greaser of these parts as the two short words: "Hey, Rube!" LAURENCE FOSTER CHURCH.

Would Know Later. "Is the prisoner sane or insane?" "I don't know yet." "But you have examined him." "Yes." "And you are an expert?" "I am one of the best. But, you see, both sides are dickering with me for a witness, and I haven't found out yet which has the more money."

The Awful Gossip. We like to knock the gossip. We can't admire her ways. Too much she criticizes; Too meager is her praise. The fallings of her neighbors Are always on display. But still we pause to listen To what she has to say.

We know Jones isn't perfect; But, then, it isn't kind To dwell on his shortcomings And fault with him to find. But still of all his meanness Perhaps we wouldn't dream Did we but stop to listen. When she has on full steam. But, though we may abhor it That she her tongue should use In such a busy fashion, Still we must know the news, And if we didn't meet her Most everywhere we went We'd have to buy a paper, And that would cost a cent.

Yes, we despise the gossips Who dainty morsels pass, But are we very certain We are not in the class? Perhaps examination, An inward look would show When knocking was the programme That we were none too slow.
