PROGRAM READY FOR CORONATION

ALREADY THOSE WHO INTEND TO BE PRESENT AT THE BRIL-LIANT AFFAIR CABLE FOR AC-COMMODATIONS

United Press Service

LONDON, May 9.—Throngs of people who expect to visit London during the coronation in June are cabling for their accommodations here.
All indications point to such a throng of visitors as have never before been gathered in any city of the world. Hotels and boarding houses are sure to be swamped and the latecomers who have failed to "book" in advance will stand an excellent chance of having to do their sleeping on park benches.

With preparations for the ceremonies, rather slow progress is being made. The king must approve every item on the program, and he is so busy that he can give only a little time daily to this work. The routes of the various processions are not yet fixed, and the military authorities do not know within 15,000 how many soldiers they will need. Still, a kind of provisional program has been arranged.

The court officials will devote June 19th to the reception and housing of royal guests and their suites. This will be hard work. Buckingham palace will be taxed to the utmost in accommodating continental royalties closely related to King George and Queen Mary. For many others apartments will be provided in West End hotels. For some, with suites so large that no hotel can lodge them, mansions are being provided.

The king and queen will give a banquet at Buckingham palace on the evening of June 19th in honor of their royal guests. The following night the Duke of Connaught will give a dinner to lesser nobilities in the principal state apartment at St. James palace.

June 22d will be coronation day.
Their majesties will drive in state for the ceremony from Buckingham palace, through the Mall, Trafalgar square, Whitehall and Parliament street to Westminster Abbey, where the crown will be placed on King George's head, the royal oath taken and the monarch formally proclaimed ruler of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions Beyond the Sea. In the evening there will be a royal family dinner at Buckingham palace.

The royal program to end through the ancient mile-square city of London and a portion of South London is set for June 23d, and the next day for the week-end, their majesties, the royal guests and foreign envoys and a large body of other more or less noble and distinguished guests will go by special—several of them—to Portsmouth for the naval review at Spithead. Most of the guests will return to London Saturday evening, but the king, the queen and a chosen few will remain aboard the royal yacht until Monday morning.

The royal family plans to spend a quiet day at Buckingham palace June 24th, but in the evening the king, the queen and the most honored among their guests will attend a gala performance at the Royal opera house.

The royal garden party on the grounds surrounding Buckingham palace will be the feature of June 22d. Several thousand guests will be present. Another gala performance at the theater is set for the evening, and afterward the Earl and the Countess of Derby will entertain their majesties at a supper and dance at Derby house.

By June 28th it is expected that the royal guests will have begun to thin out and the king will take advantage of his greater leisure to visit the Royal Agricultural show at Norwich.

At noon, June 29th, both the king and queen will drive in state to the Guildhall, to attend a luncheon given in their honor by the Lord Mayor of London. After the luncheon will follow one of the most picturesque features of all the coronation ceremonies—their majesties' ceremonial drive in their magnificent coach and with a brilliant escort through the tumble-down, age-old, narrow, crooked streets of East London stumps.

Premier Asquith and his wife will entertain the newly crowned king and queen at dinner June 30th, and the next day, the last of the coronations, their majesties will leave London for

"MAN OF THE HOUR" PLEASED AUDIENCE

Last night was the first appearance of the Melrose Company on their "coming back" engagement of three weeks' duration, and the performance they rendered last night, in the opinion of many, shows the clever company of players to be even stronger than when they scored such a tremendous hit here last fall. "The Man of the Hour," Broadhurst's great political work, was the evening's offering, and all of the intensely strong situations and climaxes were brought out in a most realistic manner.

James Dillon, who is a red-hot favorite in this city, appeared in the title role, and his rendition of the part of the newly elected young mayor who is willing to sacrifice even the chance of marrying the girl of his choice rather than prove untrue to the trust the people have in him, was splendid. His scenes with Horri-gan, the political boss, were among the strongest in the drama.

In the heavy role, that of Horri-gan, the political boss, who after buying up a share of the aldermen, seeks to intimidate the mayor and prevent him from vetoing the street car franchise, J. Waltemeyer's work stood out all through the play. Mr. Walte-meyer appeared here for the first time last night, but his histrionic talents have won him quite a following already. He is a massive man, possesses a deep voice, and when he assumed that gusto ascribed to those who have their way in questionable politics, he carried out all the requirements of the role without a fault.

Frank Howe, as Alderman Phean of the Eighth, furnished a great deal of the comedy, but there were several situations where he did some fine emotional work. Bert Chapman as Walwright was also good.

All of the ladies accredited themselves by their acting, and too much cannot be said of them. Genevieve Cunningham as Dallas Walwright was thrown into a peculiar situation, as the man she loved, the mayor, if he carried out his declaration that he would veto the obnoxious bill, would ruin the fortunes of herself and brother, as her uncle had invested their money in the railroad seeking a franchise, hoping that the mayor's love for the girl would cause him to pass the measure. In the end, the mayor's honesty and manliness won the girl for him. Miss Walwright has quite a name here as a clever actress, but in the opinion of many, she surpassed all her previous efforts last night.

Helen MacKeller, in the ingenue role of Cynthia Garrison, was as bewitching and petite as ever, and, as usual, she carried out the part in a faultless fashion. Miss Melrose appeared as the mayor's mother, and the part, while not a long one, required that splendid type of acting of which Miss Melrose is so capable.
In the third act there is a particularly beautiful scene between mother and son, when she tells him to do his duty and be honest, notwithstanding the fact that the interests have threatened to expose his dead father as a grafter, and have furnished him with proofs enough to show that they can do so.

"Merely Mary Anne," a pretty four-act comedy drama, will be given this evening.
