service have, on several occasions, brought this situation to the special attention of the city authorities during the administrations of Mayors Sanderson and Nicholas. It has been explained to these gentlemen and to members of the council that the city may avail itself of this opportunity, if it so desires. There are several ways by which the power can be used by the city. The latter can, if it sees fit, install its own system of pole lines, or possibly purchase those of the present company, and can itself retail light and power to its citizens at rates it will itself fix. It can, if it desires to charge ordinary commercial rates, it can undoubtedly reap a handsome revenue, thereby reducing the general tax levy. If the city does not care to go into the light and power business itself, it can arrange with some local distributing company to have this work carried out by the company, although possibly not on quite so advantageous terms to the city as if the city did the work itself.

There are at present a number of cities that are using power furnished by the United States through the reclamation service, and in every case with which I am familiar, the advantages to the municipalities in the way of revenue and profits are so apparent that the matter does not require discussion.

"On each occasion when the reclamation service has discussed these possibilities with the city authorities of Klamath Falls it has been advised by the latter that changes in the city charter were impending, and that the matter could not be taken up until those changes were made. I understand the city has now adopted a new charter, so that this obstacle has been removed. If the city desires to enjoy these advantages it should, at the earliest possible date, appoint a committee authorized to ascertain facts and to negotiate with the government."
