Perugia, Man Who Stole Monte Lisa

This is the first photograph of Perugia, the man who stole Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" from the Louvre in Paris two years ago. He is in an Italian prison with a prospect of being kept there for many years. Perugia has given so many stories of his reason for stealing the picture that no one knows his motive further than that it was probably to sell it for a large sum. He said first that he was anxious to force France to make amends to Italy for the large number of works of art taken by Napoleon on his invasion of Italy. Later he said he had offered the painting to art dealers.

Margaret Wilson Captivating

President's Eldest Daughter Takes Capital by Storm; Is Possessed of Sweet Voice and Appears for Charity

(Herald Special Service)
Attractive and winsome Margaret Wilson, eldest daughter of President and Mrs. Wilson, has fairly captured Washington, for she is full of life and vivacity and all the beautiful attributes that go to make a charming woman.

Along with this, Miss Wilson, who is officially the "first young lady of the land," bears a distinction unique and without precedent in the social doings of White House families that have gone before, for she is a singer of rare accomplishments, and, like her precedent-smashing father, ignores customs of the past, and just as any young woman in private life would do, she appears in public and semi-public to sing for charity's sake.

This alone has captivated Washington; no other "first young lady of the land" ever before has brushed aside the staid traditions of exclusiveness surrounding her official social position as Miss Wilson has done; and it is understood now that she will cheerfully participate in public or semi-public entertainments in Washington for this or that charity whenever the cause is a worthy one and her engagements will permit her to do so.

The first appearance on the public stage of Washington of this distinguished young lady was recently in a song recital for the pleasure of the blind. It took place in the reading room of the national library for the blind. For these unfortunates, on that occasion, the daughter of the White House gave a program of classic songs. Probably never again in her life will Miss Wilson sing to an audience more appreciative and enthusiastic than this sightless one within the pitiful walls of the institution for the blind. The pathos surrounding her unseeing hearers so affected the talented but intensely human young woman that when she returned that night to the cheerfulness of the White House, a decided suspicion of tea roof joy, at the pleasure she had given, shone in her lustrous brown eyes, eyes that normally are constantly dancing and sparkling with merriment.

Miss Wilson's voice is a clear, sweet, resonant soprano, with a rich mezzo quality, and as she sings her audience forgets she is the daughter of the president, and quickly finds it self wrapped up in, and hearing only and absolutely the finished artist. Her voice has good carrying power, and every song she sings is delightful.

Quite naturally, the president and Mrs. Wilson are very proud of Margaret and her accomplishments. Instead of objecting to her appearance in public for charity's sake, they are pleased to have her do so. No other

Profit Sharing Success
One year ago the Ashland Ice and Storage company officials decided to see if it would be possible to increase its profits by giving its employees an interest in them. A profit sharing plan was devised, the aim being to increase the efficiency of the force, at the same time decreasing the expense. The plan was to give the employees a certain per cent of the profits and especially of any saving of expense which the men could bring about. As a result the business of 1913 was considerably more than that of 1912, while the expense, particularly of labor, was considerably less.—Ashland Tidings.

Carden Will Be Taken From Post for His Anti-American Tactics

Sir Lionel Carden, British ambassador to Mexico, owes his recall by his majesty solely to his opposition to American policies, according to gossip in diplomatic circles. It is understood that he was recalled to make room for a man more disposed to cooperate with the United States in the Mexican situation.

A study of the Carden affair shows that ever since the trouble started he has worked solely for the interests of the British oil syndicate, which controls the rich oil fields in the vicinity of Tuxpan. Lord Cowden, head of this syndicate, has influenced Carden considerably, and took the stand that the Mexican intervention rumor on the part of the United States was a scheme to steal the oil interests.

The forest products laboratory at Madison, Wis., has made 4,000 tests on the strength of American woods.
