

KLAMATH COUNTY HAS OPPORTUNITY TO GET ELK HERD

EIGHTEEN CALVES TO BE LIBERATED

Youngsters Are Now in the State Reserve in Northeast Oregon, and Only Positive Action by Sportsmen to Assure Range and Protection Is Needed to Have the Big Game Hunt Here

Do Klamath county sportsmen wish to see a herd of elk in the county? If so, they have the opportunity to get such a herd, providing they get busy at once, and make a showing to the state fish and game commission that they will see that the animals are provided with proper range, and are given protection from dogs, poachers, etc.

"The commission has eighteen head of yearling elk for distribution," says Commissioner Charles F. Stone. These are now in the commission's reserve in the extreme northeastern part of Oregon. The calves, with twenty or more grown elk, are confined in a reserve that is thoroughly fenced.

"The commission is afraid to liberate the calves near the reserve, as the range there is not as good as to the eastward in Idaho, or northward into Oregon. Therefore, to keep from losing the animals after the expense of raising them, the commission has decided to send the calves to some other place better suited, and the commission is looking about for some other location in Oregon for liberating the elk.

"If the Klamath Sportsmen's Association can single out a locality in Klamath county where the range is sufficiently good, and where the elk will be given proper protection, there is no question but what the first batch of calves would be liberated here. Crater Lake park might be used, but a place closer to Klamath Falls, I think, should be selected."

The commission some time ago purchased a herd of grown elk, and these are kept at the reserve. Each year hereafter the yearling calves are to be removed from the reserve and used in the re-introducing of this splendid game species in Oregon.

Seventy-three peace delegates and fifty-four newspaper men comprised the passenger list. Bryan did not sail. Ford's passports are good only in the neutral countries of Europe. However, Ford says he will assert his rights as an American to visit the belligerent nations.

"My last word to America is this: Everyone try for peace; down with preparedness," said Mr. Ford just before the Oscar cast off from the pier. "There is a certain gang of death machinery peddlers who would like to see this thing go to smash, but I don't think it will."

Today Is Last of the Beautiful Jewel City

(United Press Correspondence)

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4.—The Panama-Pacific exposition is closing today. They call it Auld Lang Syne Day, but nevertheless it is a day of revelry. Thousands of visitors crowded through the turnstiles to bid farewell in song and dance to this city of wonder, which in ten months has been visited by nearly 19,000,000 people.

The exposition books show a net profit of $1,040,000.

The national salute of twenty-one guns boomed over the Marina at sunrise, again at noon, and once more as the sun reluctantly disappears through the Golden Gate, its dying rays shimmering softly upon the Tower of Jewels.

Dancing, concerts, sports, music by the exposition chorus and all sorts of other fun marked the last day's program. At noon President C. C. Moore offered the international toast typifying world peace, world service and world patriotism. All nations, organizations and institutions having a part in the exposition, joined in the sentiment. Late in the afternoon the flags on the various buildings came down, and the state and foreign buildings closed forever to the throngs.

Tonight will be celebrated the spectacular part of the farewell. Illuminated floats and fireworks will turn night into day; and shortly before midnight the mirth will give place to impressive ceremonies. President Moore will bid goodbye to the exposition. From a concealed orchestra in the dome of the Tower of Jewels will float the strains of Farewell to Thee; and somewhere in the distance a bugle will sound taps. On the stroke of midnight the president will touch a button extinguishing all lights, flags will mount skyward, and from the throats of the thousands of visitors upon the grounds will come the old song, Auld
