AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

SAGE TEA AND SULPHUR TURNS GRAY, FACED HAIR DARK AND GLOSSY

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it, and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy, and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.

COUNTY FARMERS COUNCIL IS PLAN

COUNTY AGRICULTURIST GLAISYER HOPES TO BRING TOGETHER FARMERS FROM ALL PARTS OF KLAMATH COUNTY

An agriculturist council, or some organization that will bring together farmers from all parts of Klamath county to discuss matters of interest common to them all, is being planned by County Agriculturist H. R. Glaisyer. It is Mr. Glaisyer's plan to have a representative from each of the several district farmers' leagues meet regularly, and for this council to be the medium through which the several district farmers' leagues shall act in affairs affecting the agricultural welfare of the whole county.

At present there are thirteen district leagues in Klamath county. Mr. Glaisyer is attempting to have leagues formed in all localities where they do not now exist. The county council is expected to be organized this fall.

French Army Hits Like Gigantic Sledge Hammer

By HENRY WOOD (United Press Staff Correspondent) WITH THE FRENCH ARMY ON THE SOMME, Aug. 21.—Like a gigantic multiplied sledge hammer, the French army is smashing away at the German lines on the Somme battle front.

The new French offensive in no way represents the Russian steam roller. Instead, it hammers continually, with blow upon blow, at any given point until eventually, the French officers believe, it must break down both the German defenses and the resistance of the German army. The success of this steady hammering is demonstrated both in the actual advance and the influx of prisoners who have surrendered in large numbers.

Before going to the fighting front I inspected the vast organization behind the lines for feeding the offensive. It is this incredible preparation on which, apparently, everything has been foreseen and nothing overlooked, that puts the punch into the French sledge hammer blows.

I first visited one of the eight ammunition and material depots, established since last May, behind the line. The depot covers a square half mile into which French's northwestern network railways daily pours material coming from all parts of the world.

If the French offensive has carried terrible destruction in advance of the armies, it has wrought equally incredible progress in the rear. The eight ammunition depots have been connected with the battle front by a veritable mystic maze of railways of both broad and narrow gauge. In times of peace it would take a year's work to construct them. Approaching the battle front, these lines converge even thicker and ever more intricately. So perfected is this railway system that each of the eight depots can pour out upon the Somme battle front its entire square half mile of munitions and material every thirty-six hours.

On other specially constructed railways, all broad gauge, guns are being carried to the front. France does not lack heavy artillery on the Somme front, but is making constant additions for the purpose of increasing the power of her punch.

From the depot, the way led to one of the four aviation camps which protected every depot, but which are only a small part of the aviation service on the Somme front. During the visit scarcely a minute passed that armed aeroplanes either did not return or depart for the German front. The air was literally alive with aerial scouts and fighters.

Returning toward the rear in the evening, after observing the fighting from the plateau of Dompierre, south of the Somme and from a point of vantage just north of the river, I was amazed to see that since early in the morning what had appeared like veritable mountains of material and munitions in the supply depot had entirely disappeared.

The great guns which had been creeping along on specially constructed railways, and which I had imagined could not reach the front for weeks, were no longer visible, having either arrived near their emplacements or having been transferred to other railway lines.

Nearer the front I was able from this gigantic displacement of munitions and material to gain an impression of what had gone into the day's sledge hammer blows. Progressing toward the rear in the direction of the general munitions and material depots we met great trains and convoys of fresh material moving toward the front to replace that which I had seen disappear.

Yet there was no hurry, no excitement. Everything was orderly, methodical.

Above all, the impression a neutral observer receives from a visit to the Somme front is this—that the French are supremely confident, and not only determined, but prepared in every detail to carry out Grant's famous declaration:

"We will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." And more, too.

ZUNI INDIANS STILL LIVING 16th CENTURY

TOTALLY UNAFFECTED BY MODERN CIVILIZATION

Berkeley Professor Finds New Mexico Indians in Religion, Social Organization and Ways of Life Are Where They Were a Thousand Years Ago. Religious Observance Is Whole of Their Life.

United Press Service

BERKELEY, Aug. 21—"The Zuni Indians are living still in the sixteenth century. I should never have dreamed that aboriginal life could still be going on in America, so totally unaffected by modern civilization."

So declared Professor A. L. Kroeber, head of the department of anthropology of the University of California, on returning to Berkeley today from a year's leave of absence spent at the American Museum of Natural History in New York and on two separate expeditions in its behalf among the Zuni Indians of New Mexico.

"To the astonishment of anthropologists," said Professor Kroeber, "it turns out that in religion, in social organization, and in ways of life, the Zuni are still what they were a thousand years ago. The Aztecs and the Spaniards left some traces upon them, just as the Zuni have acquired sewing machines and copper riveted overalls from the white man, but that mankind could exist on any other basis than their own type of clan organization, or without such religious institutions as their own, seems to them inconceivable. Religious observance is the whole warp of the fabric of their lives. There is not a month without its great religious ceremony, not a week without its esoteric rites. The whole of life—work, play, family life, medicine, agriculture, the weather, and everything within and without—is interwoven with ritualism and formalism of a complication and elaborateness seldom equalled in any race of men."
