TARIFF IN THE STATE PLATFORM.

In the republican state platform adopted in Portland, we find three resolutions devoted to the tariff question. The first of these denounces President Cleveland's idea of our present tariff laws as "a piece of unparalleled political dishonesty," because its sole object "is the success of the democratic party." The second resolution favors a tax on foreign goods to provide the revenues of the general government, and also recommends the placing of such articles on the free list as cannot be largely produced by our own people. The third resolution seems to be put in for effect. It "deprecates the attempt of the democratic administration to degrade the honest toil of America to a level with the pauper labor of the old world."

The resolutions seem to have been hastily prepared and by a committee not very familiar with the science of finance; hence they have struck a number of propositions together in a loose, disjointed manner, the logical significance of which it is somewhat hard to deduce.

But it is clear that the framers of these phantoms in the republican platform favor a revision of the tariff. Their assent to the policy of a tariff for revenue purposes with protection to American labor thrown in as an incident. This is evidently yielding the point that has kept the political parties in hot water for a number of years, and which was mainly instrumental in causing the overthrow of Mr. Blaine in 1884. The platform he stood on maintained the virtues of a protective tariff, which offended the liberal wing of the republican party, and alienated Henry Ward Beecher, George W. Curtis, the New York Times, the St. Paul Pioneer-Press, and a long list of effective republican speakers and editors. To maintain this uncompromising attitude again, and refuse compliance with the demands of a minority of the republican party will be to invite disaster a second time and bring about republican disintegration. There may not be more than one-fourth of the republican voters who have lost faith in a high tariff, and who favor revision, or we will concede, for the sake of argument, there may be but half of that number; still, it must be remembered, that in the close national contest to be waged next November, we cannot afford to drive away any portion of our voting force. This fact seems to have been impressed on the minds of the delegates who composed our state convention, and they have made the concession which they seem to have regarded as absolutely necessary to success.

So important a point as this yielded it is idle to cavil over details. Mr. Morrison's bill, which occupied so large a share of the last congress, proposed a horizontal cut in the tariff rates; that is to reduce the impost on imported goods one-fifth, and let all protected interests share alike. This was defeated, and the popular clamor raised against the measure, was based on the fact that it was indiscriminating and oppressive. Mr. Mills proposes to arrive at the desired end by another route. His bill places hundreds of articles on the free list—garden soil, performing elephants, blue nose potatoes, and so on—and reduces the tax on many of those that are retained. We believe the passage of this bill, without knowing all its details, would be in the public interest, but it has been made a party measure, and is most likely to be defeated.

Cesar's ghost threatened to meet Brutus at Philippi, and the ghost of this emolument measure, (should it receive its quietus in congress,) will be present to confuse the counsels of the republican convention in Chicago. The discretion of our own state convention is to be commended, and we trust that a like measure of wisdom will be vouchsafed to the national body.

A Berlin dispatch of yesterday mentions that Minister Pendleton, while traveling to Frankfort, was stricken with apoplexy. He was taken to the hospital at Wiesbaden, where his condition speedily improved. The paralysis is pronounced slight, and complete recovery is expected.

THE Astorian repeats the cry that St. John beat Blaine. St. John, on the other hand, says that Blaine and Cleveland conspired to defeat him. This point ought to be determined, because it is constantly cropping up in the papers.

There is ice enough in Lake Erie, if packed by westerly winds, to jam the east end of the lake well into May, unless the weather should prove extraordinarily warm.—Cleveland Leader. If the east end of Lake Erie ever gets jammed into the middle of May there will be no need of ice boxes at Buffalo until June, or until Summer pulls the east end of the lake out again.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

The great trouble in dramatic circles is to get an attraction that will draw a big house. In this connection we can cordially recommend to theatre managers eight locomotives that will shortly be out of engagement. They are at present occupied in pulling the Hotel Brighton on Coney Island some three hundred feet inland. The feat of the most successful drawing of a big house on record.—Detroit Free Press.
