DEMOCRATIC FACTIOUSNESS.

The democratic policy of withholding statehood from the territories, for fear of strengthening the republican vote was again shown in the senate recently on a vote to admit South Dakota to the Union. The measure passed by a strict party vote, the republican senators voting for it, and the democratic senators against it. Not one democratic senator had the courage or manliness to rise above the low standard of his party, and cast his vote on the side of justice to South Dakota, and in sympathy with the wishes of the people of the territory and of the large majority of the people of the northern states. For years the people of this territory have been trying to get into the Union. They have attempted it with the territory intact and failed. They have voted to divide their territory, the northern half to remain as such until it could fulfill the conditions essential to statehood, and asked for the admission of the southern half, which in population and all other requisites of statehood has long been entitled to admission; and in this, too, they failed.

Under the law and conditions governing the admission of territories, and by every rule of precedent, they had the right to expect that their petition would be granted; but the law that was framed to facilitate admission has been used by the democrats to obstruct it, and the people of South Dakota, who are entitled to vote at the next presidential election, are barred out by the partisan majority of the lower house. Though there are more states in the Union with a smaller population than South Dakota, and though it is larger in area than Minnesota, Nebraska or Kansas, its neighbors, it is denied admission because the majority of its citizens are republicans.

A caucus of the house democrats has decided that South Dakota above cannot come in so as to vote in the next presidential election, and has committed itself to Springer's omnibus bill providing for the admission of Dakota as a whole, with Montana, New Mexico and Washington thrown in. It is inevitable that the senate bill admitting South Dakota will be rejected.

AN HONEST TRIBUTE.

We learn that Elder J. W. Wells, state organizer of the prohibition party of Oregon, is elected one of the nine state delegates to the national prohibition convention, to meet in Indianapolis, May 30th.

He is invited by the national prohibition lecture bureau to remain east a few weeks and assist in the presidential campaign. He may do so, and alternate his political labors with evangelical exhortation. He is a preacher of the Christian denomination, and a zealous worker in the Lord's vineyard.

Bro. Webb is a fellow townsman, a man worthy of the highest esteem, although a pestilent heretic; that is, he is a doughty chieftain in the prohibition camp. His eminent usefulness has no doubt prompted his engagement in this enlarged sphere. He has an immense capacity for work and keeps a cool head when the stress is the sorest. He is in earnest, and the sincere man, when he has any power of words, rarely fails to win conviction. On the platform Mr. Webb is a close reasoner, and his argument is so cogently made that his audience is always interested. He has a magnetism, too, the warmth that prompts his thoughts fuses the breasts of others, and he prevails without apparent effort. We cannot help wishing him success, although he is a political foe, because we know the intrinsic worth of the man, and also know that his energies are expended in behalf of suffering humanity.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL HALLOWELL, of Kansas, has hit on a new method in enforcing the prohibition law. Owners of property have rented their premises for joints because of the high rents they receive, but the jointists when arrested are found irresponsible and the fines assessed against them are not paid. The state prosecutor is now charging the fines and all the costs of prosecution against the property holders, and in Wichita he has filed a petition to foreclose a lien of $3,279 on the property of Rosa Warner, who had, it is claimed, knowingly rented her property for the purpose of keeping a joint. The judgment of the court on this petition is looked forward to with some interest.

BINGOER HERMANN made a strenuous effort to get on the River and Harbor committee, but failed. That shows his influence.—Englewood Guard.

Hermann did not stand alone in this failure to get on the River and Harbor committee. Several of the other 324 members failed to get on this committee. Hermann is on two very important committees, though, one of which, that of public lands, is only second in importance to Oregon to the River and Harbor committee.

Minister (to sick official)—You are aware, dear brother, that you are about to die?

Sick Official—Yes; I am aware of it.

Minister—And do you feel you can go with resignation?

Sick Official—Yes; but I'm going without resignation. We die, you know, but we never resign.—Washington Critic.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

C. H. Paekendam who recently left school is now teaching in Idaho.

The societies have purchased a handsome eight-day clock for use in their hall.

Miss Eva Cox was at chapel Thursday. Miss Maggie Brown rendered a recitation.

Prof. Starr has not yet returned from Benton county, and his classes feel his absence very much.

John O. Goltra of the class of '87 came up from Portland last evening to spend Sunday visiting in the city.

Lafe Coon and John Griffith were present at chapel exercises Wednesday. Miss Rebecca Brown read an essay.

The Woman's college is being repaired and more windows put in the tower, which improves the looks very much.

The university will soon have some repairs done in way of painting to be completed before commencement.

The fourth term chapel rhetoricals began Monday, with F. M. Anderson reading an oration entitled, "Golden Truth."

Rev. J. W. Klepper of Portland, has been chosen to deliver the university sermon, no one has yet been chosen to address the law class.

The societies have handed in the annual reports of their proceedings for the year, including the list of officers, to be published in the catalogue.

The regular semi-term rhetoricals of the academy took place Thursday. Those who held receipts of equivalent work performed in society were excused.

The records of scholarship of all the students who have attended the university since Prof. Van Scoy has been president have been bound in eight neat volumes, the standing of any student can be turned to at once, and will dispense with much labor in looking up the records of those who graduate.

The Moderators at their meeting last evening debated the question, Resolved, That the United States are indebted more to lawyers than to any other class of men. The debate was opened on the affirmative by W. C. Hawley on the negative by S. W. Stryker. After a spirited discussion of some length it was decided in favor of the negative.
