Scene at the Custom House.

A young and very pretty widow, dressed in elegant mourning, stood by an open trunk at the custom house the other morning. A lynx eyed woman inspector was going through the spoils of Paris.

A correspondent writing from Monte Carl says that the croppers of that famous gaming resort vouch for the truth of the story that Labouchere won $25,000 there by means of his "system."

The Adventures of a Horse.

Among the incidents of the storm in Boston, The Electric Review relates how the entanglement of a horse attached to one of the coal delivery teams was caused by the wires. It was in the evening. The horse got entangled and the wires threw him down.

Old and New Fashions in Marriage.

We may feel a twinge of regret, but we have ceased to be shocked when we hear the marriage of two ardent young people spoken of as "a genuine old fashioned love match, such as one seldom hears of in this day."

One direct quotation will prove the truth of Oscar Wilde and his wife are a very ordinary looking pair of mortals, according to a London correspondent.

The little king of Spain is a constant source of disturbance in the royal palace of Madrid.

Henry Greville (Mme. Durand), in an interview in Paris on literary topics, explains Zola's subanthropic view of human nature in part by the hardships through which he went when he first came to Paris.

First Bank notes, which are firms of transfers of the property of banks, and are necessary to the affairs of every-day life.

Second, Cashiers' checks, which transfer by the bank itself, the title to the property of the bank, to the amount named in the check to the person or corporation named therein.

Third, Checks, which transfer the title of the individual making them, to the person or corporation named therein, which becomes that in the possession of the bank when the check is made, to the person or corporation named in the check.

Fourth, Drafts, which are means of transferring the title of property from one individual or corporation to another, through the assistance of a bank.

Fifth, Bills of exchange, which transfer the title to the property of a banker in one country to an individual or banker in another country.

A new form of art has been evolved called "smoke pictures." They are made by the smoke of a gas flame on white cardboard or paper.

Yemassee goes the champion light weight. "That's so? He don't look much like a fighter."

"He isn't; he's a coal dealer." —Exchange.
