For President, BENJAMIN HARRISON, Of Indiana. For Vice President, LEVI P. MORTON, Of New York.

PRESENTED AT COURT.

The Vanderbilts have been to Europe, and in England, it is said, no Americans ever created so great a sensation. All the Mackay splendours pale into insignificance beside them, and their siege of London was short, since the whole fashionable world promptly surrendered to these monarchs of millions.

Of course there was a presentation at court, and the dispatches we are told, "quite fail to convey to the understanding the full gorgeousness of Mrs. Vanderbilt's appearance."

Mrs. Vanderbilt wore a dress made with a demitain of heavy crevette pink satin brocade with scattered bouquets of wild roses in gold and silver.

The silver tissue draperies were held at their juncture with the train by large diamond ornaments finished with pendant chains of diamonds and pearls.

Her necklace of editates was estimated at $150,000 by the ladies who stood about her and those in her ears were said to represent $15,000 more.

This can hardly be called republican simplicity, and we cannot wonder that railroad men who allow their wives to masquerade in this costly finery should be looked on with suspicion by the tolling farmers of the west.

This tomfoolery in Buckingham palace explains the popular feeling. If justice reigned in our social relations, when an employer finds he is getting more than his share of the profits, he would cast his eye over the wages book, and even up to some extent by a more equitable apportionment of the earnings.

In Minnesota, and Iowa, and Kansas, and Nebraska, the farmers for several years have been struggling with low prices for their grain, and cyclones, drought and chinch bugs have defeated their useful labors.

As a consequence their farms are mortgaged, and the payment of heavy interest on their loans drains their life blood. A railroad owner, in the exercise of wise judgment, would adjust his freight rates to the exigencies of the times, taking a fair margin for running expenses and dividend on the capital invested, but not oppressing his patrons.

The Statesman went all the way to Cohoes Falls in New York, to find a cotton spinner willing to hear testimony in favor of the Mills bill.

MONS. TONSON AGAIN.

The Statesman went all the way to Cohoes Falls in New York, to find a cotton spinner willing to hear testimony in favor of the Mills bill.

According to our neighbor's statement this man is a free trader, and a believer in this commercial policy because it will so starve out the American operatives they will not have spirit left to strike for higher wages.

He seems to do his own thinking, and gives his brother manufacturers this wholesome caution: "Manufacturers who oppose a revision of the tariff, being blind to the growing sentiment in its favor, make a great mistake, as they will find when a measure of tariff reform shall be passed, not by republicans or democrats, but by tariff reformers, making the duty on manufactured goods from 10 to 15 per cent less than in the present bill."

There is some discourse of reason in this; an exercise of the attribute that looks before and after. We find a long letter from this Mr. Johnston, extensively copied in the eastern journals, in which he shows himself not the mouthing blatherskite the Statesman would have us believe, but a man who can put two and two together, and knows how to sling the Queen's English.

So much for Mr. Johnston, who in our morning column has introduced to a Marion county audience. We find him a good fellow, as we predicted we should, and can merely say of him that he represents a class of manufacturers whom political managers will find it hard to deal with.

In Chicago, two years ago, a mason's horse fell from the fifth story of a building and descended on the head of Rev. Chas. E. Mandeville, pastor of the Western Ave. M. E. church, of that city.

The San Francisco Bulletin says the Examiner "does not know a tariff from a hand-spike." When a suspicion was cast on Hamlet's soundness of mind, he said, when the wind was southerly, he could tell a hawk from a handsaw.

Col. T. C. Smith returned from Albany this morning. He met and had a consultation with Lieut. Pearce of E Co., and with Col. W. M. Hoag, manager of the O. P. R. R., in reference to the coming celebration of the 4th of July at Corvallis.

The details of the transportation question were settled. The three companies from this county will leave here on the evening of the 3rd, and will be met at Albany with a special train which will transfer them to Corvallis that evening.

The military exercises will begin in the morning with formation of the regiment, followed by review by Brig. Gen. J. M. Siglin and staff at 10:30 or 11 A. M.
