BILL NYE AT SALEM.

The Traveling Repository of Ancient Newspaper Gags Gets a Big Paying House.

A very large and fashionable audience greeted Mr. Bill Nye and company of artists at Reed's opera house.

Frank Downey played a rigoletti—it was good of the kind—and was as well played as a great many young ladies in Salem can play it to much smaller audiences.

Now came the luxury of the evening. Mr. Nye, and the high art reporter of the JOURNAL strained his eagle eye to catch sight of it.

HE HEARD A RING AT THE DOOR. "One night I heard a deep ring at my door-bell. I rushed out, and somebody ran away. I could not see him, but I heard him and followed the sound to the corner.

"We both seemed willing to call it a drawn fight then. As soon as we recovered our breaths—he got his first; it seemed closer to him than mine was—we got up. Then I heard him say in a Congressional tone of voice: 'Now, young man, I will teach you to ring my door bell.'"

His anecdote about the Indiana farmer who brought his dead boy home when the army broke out, and who had promised to keep his grave green, even if he had to paint it, was not received very well at Salem.

For a short time only we will make cabinet photographs for $2 per dozen. These are full size cabinet photographs mounted on pure gilt edged cards, and include standing figures, groups, children and babies, and large vignette heads, all retouched and finished in the latest style of the art.
