CAVALRY TACTICS.

How Horses Are Trained to Lie Down at the Bugle Call.
Troop H, of the Third United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort McIntosh, Tex., has, according to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat correspondent, won so much praise for its unique exhibitions of drill, in which the borses seem as much interested as the men, that it is frequently referred to as the "famous circus troop of cavalry." It goes through what is sometimes called the 'mounted infantry drill' with great precision and invariably attracts quite exception al notice. Three score sleek sorrel horses display an amount of equine intelligence that is at first almost bewildering, obeying the bugle calls with the promptness and accursey of old soldiers. The work of traming commenced about the middle of Nevember, 1887, the drills being for four hours daily, two in the morning and two in the

The modus operandi was as follows: The The modus operandi was as follows: The horses all appeared fitted with sureingles and watering bridles only, each trooper being provided with two leather straps, one about two feet and the other about ten feet long. At a given signal each manied his horse to a short distance from the others and fastened the long strap to the horse's right fore leg, just above the hoof, and carried the long of the strap under the sure of the strap under the sure of the local strap under the sure of the sure of the strap under the sure of and fastened the long strap to the horse's right fore leg, just above the hoof, and carried the end of the strap under the surcingle and over the horse's back, so that the end trailed on the ground of the horse's left side. He then fastened the short strap to the horse's left fore leg, just above the hoof, then raising this hoof the strap was carried over the leg of the horse, above the knee and firmly buckled, thus leaving the astonished animal standing on three legs and wondering what on earth his rider meant. At the next signal the troeper meant. At the next signal the troeper "Golden Medical Discovery" has cured severe, lingering coughs and greeted Content of the strap was followed by the medicine, will you? "Never! Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery are household words already," "I will. Good bye." "I will. Good bye." "Golden Medical Discovery" has cured severe, lingering coughs and arrested Content of the household words are given by the medicine, will you? "Golden Medical Discovery has cured severe, lingering coughs and arrested Content of the household words are given by the medicine will you?" "Never! Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery are household words already," "I will. Good bye." I will good bye. hand and grasping the long strap close to the horse's back commenced to pull upon this strap, at the same time pressing against the left side of the animal with his right shoulder. The result of this artifice was in all cases, except with the most vicious horses (of which there were not a few), to bring them down with both knees on the ground, as the strap pulled up the right hoof with a jerk.

A firm and sustained pressure with the shoulder then brought the horse over so that he lay at full length on his right side, whereupon, after quieting him both by the voice and by stroking him, a carbine was held in front of him, rubbed against him and held so that he could smell it, and then discharged. With the majority of the horses this, of course, produced an amount of terror and tugging and snorting, that, like the scene between the parrot and the monkey, can be more easily imagined than described. This was repeated during each drill until horse and man were fatigued. In a week at least ten horses would lie down at the bugle-call without straps by simply patting the boof with the hand and telling them what was wanted. The real work of perseverance and patience lay with the remaining less brilliant horses. There were at least a lozen which had apparently come to the firm conclusion that nothing would ever induce them to submit to the indignity of ying down at full length in the dust.

With these animals force was used, it is true, but it was done in such a way that the horse was not terrified, but was made to understand that his trooper was his master, whom he must in all things obey. It may be said, en passant, that the trooper in certain cases found out this fact only at this drill. With these high-strung and sometimes vicious horses four men necessary, using two long straps to throw German, 10c per pound; raisins, $2.50 per them, and these were necessarily aided by the lash of the troop commander. in six weeks the horses would all lie down, without straps, at the sound of the bugle, with the exception of possibly six or seven, with which straps were necessary, and one or two which still required the heroic treatment. While lying down single shots and volleys were discharged by the men firing over the horses as rests. Two or three of brutes were by sheer patience and perseverance. One little sorrel bronco, in particular, was so mercial streets. little sorrel bronco, in particular, was so wild and vicious that his hind feet had never been shod, nor had he ever been ridden without serious accident. He was literally "wild, woolly, and hard to curry." The trouble with this imp in equine form was putting the straps on him in the first place. It was like the mice agreeing that under the circumstances the best thing to be done was to put a bell on a collar and put the collar on the cat's neck. But no volunteers appeared to put the collar on the cat. To accomplish the strapping strategy was used, and for a long time without success. The strap was laid in a noose on the ground and the horse was led artfully so that one of his fore feet would be in the noose, then with a quick jerk an attempt was made to catch his hoof, but the imp was toe quick and would never walk into any such trap again willingly. Six powerful men with straps finally threw him one day and held him down. Then his protests commenced. His hind feet flew out, and continued to fly out, with a velocity and power that were wonderful and in the highest degree exhil arating. And the writer avers solemnly that if there had been any shoes on that horse's hind feet, no matter how tightly nailed on, they would have flown off and landed probably somewhere across the river in Mexico. Kind measures were used, however, a long time, and the imp was finally apparently quieted and allowed

After a time an attempt was made to throw him again, which was an exact duplicate of the other. This time, after throwing him, the lash was applied with a stinging cut to his legs at every kick, and this finally triumphed. In a half hour he lay quite still, and submitted to patting on every part of and submitted to patting on every part of tils body, including his feet. In ten days he was gentle as any horse in the troop. the last of January, 1888, every horsein the P. J.
