Many jokes-good, bad and indifferent-have been poked at the ladies for Ger devotion to shopping. Some one one said that a woman has been known to forget her own name while engaged in the fascinating pastime, and the statement has found many believers, always, of course, among the sterner sex. Whether all the ladies are equally oblivious to everything is by no means earting but a imppening in a large down town store may be taken as having some bearing on the subject.

The store, which is one of the finest in the city, has a large mirror completely covering the rear wall, serving the double purpose of ornamentation and protection by enabling the floorwalkers to watch the ever moving crowds. The lady had been examining and pricing fabrics until her brain was in a whirl, moving from one counter to another, and all the while gradually approaching the rear of the store. At the last counter, after seeing everything that was to be seen, she heaved a sigh of regret and bethought herself of

And just here the fun occurred. Her mind was busy with the problem of whether shrimp pink or pea green would be a match for her complexion providing she could purchase either, and she was not aware of her proximity to the rear. Rather, she had an idea that she was near the front, and that the large and magnificent mirror was the door. She approached it, and thinking she saw some one coming toward her stepped to one side. Her reflection, of course, did the same. She stepped back. Ditto the reflection. Then she got angry.

"Excuse me," she said in the clear, cutting tones peculiar to her sex when fond of dancing that you must indulge in it here? If you let me pass I'll be obliged." No answer.

"Well," said the now thoroughly aroused woman, "I'm going out, so you'd better stand aside."

Suiting the action to the word, she took one-two-three steps, and landed up against the mirror. A little scream, a blushing woman hurriedly going in the right direction this time, a general titter from the customers and clerks, and the comedy was over,-Pittsburg Dispatch.

Az Estimate of England's Future King. To American eyes, especially those through which I look, Albert Edward occupies a very unique position. His strength is felt everywhere, and in relation to everything. When he becomes king he will have no more power than now, except the ability to sign papers and appoint a few friends to office. If he has been merely a leader in social life, he has managed to impress himself so well upon his people that there is not a man nor woman in England who would not be glad to see him the ruler. That is saying much for one who has been surrounded with great temptations from childhood, and him with heavy responsibilities.

on forced him for the moment to take upon himself the lighter obligations of life and meet his people on the field instead of viewing them from the throne. He could only weigh himself and be weighed outside of official life. Yet he rose above that position, step by step, until he made his influence felt all over the kingdom by means of the knowledge he gained by personal contact with the world in almost every walk of life. If this does not evidence a strong man, then what does?-Frank Burr in Lippincott's.

People Buy More Flowers.

"One of the most encouraging things I see," said the confirmed optimist, "is that the dwellers in great cities are coming to regard flowers as a necessity and not merely a luxury. Until a year or two ago few flowers were grown in winter, and many of these withered in windows, as the florist was obliged to charge great sums for them. Now everybody buys flowers, and even those who deny themselves the delight of purchasing have the pleasure of seeing them offered in the streets."

"It always burt me so in those old days," said a gentle voice in the optimist's audience, "to think, when I bought a bunch of roses, that I was paying for at least one other bunch which had faded unsold. Now that so many flowers are bought, very few proportionally are wasted. This is almost as comforting to one's feelings as it is to one's purse."-P. A. Resseur in Kate Field's Washington.

How He Lost His Alum Mine.

Diek Gelatt, stage proprietor of Douglas county, Nevada, says: "Talking about yarns that are told to the tenderfoot tourists, I used to have one story when I drove stage into Genoa. At bare white spot that gleamed in the sun like a big piece of tin. When the passengers asked about it I told them this yarn: 'That, gentlemen, is my alum mine—all there is left of a beautiful prospect. You see, I struck the genuine onlder Hill ledge and ran a forty foot tunnel, when just before sundown we struck a big body of alum. We quit work then, but when we came next morning we couldn't see a bit of mine except that bare spot.'

"Why what became of it?" some fellow always asked. 'Well,' I used to France in the Seventeenth century, reply, 'you see there was a heavy rain that night and the whole thing puckered up.' "-St. Louis Globe Demograt.

What Happens If You Take Arsenie, When a single dose of arsenie in sufficient quantity to be felt has been taken, colicky pains, bowel disorder and perhaps nausen result. In the course of an hour after a poisonous dose has been taken an intense burning pain is felt in the esophagus and stomach. This spreads to the entire anterior portion of the lower part of the trunk. A sense of constriction at the broat and an acrid, metallic taste accompany the pain. Then vomiting and relaxation of the bowels begin. As the case progresses the symptoms Ingrease in intensity. Then comes a thirst that water will not allay, although it apparently increases the stomach disturbance. The victim groans and

An Apt Rebuke.

There is a Unitarian clergyman who is not without a power of keen retort, and who is none the less gifted with they wish to be sarcastic, "are you so the grace to command his tongue rather than allow his tongue to command him. He has in his congregation one of those women who make a pretense of frankness an excuse for rudeness, and who are given to boasting that they are plain spoken, when the truth is that they are simply ill bred and insolent. This especial lady is wealthy, and there are not many in the list of her acquaintances who dare rebuke her, albeit they do together console each other for the wounds they suffer from her tongue by abusing her roundly.

It chanced that one evening the lady and the clergyman were partners at whist at the house of a common friend, and so successful were they that they won almost every game for the even ing. Like people who are fond of having their own way, the lady was in high humor over the success, and when the play was over she pushed back her chair from the table with the characteristic and graceful remark to her partner:

"You do play a good game of whist, Mr. Blank. If you only preached as well as you play whist it would be a treat to go to church to hear you." The elergyman was quite equal to the occasion. He kept his temper and who had no political power to endow his face under perfect control as he replied: "Thank you, Miss Sharp; but you know anybody can learn to play whist, while genius and good breeding come by grace of God."-Boston Courier.

New Circuit Transfer System. A system has been designed to meet a new but promising demand for the use of private telephone and telegraph facilities by subscribers whose business with their correspondents at distant points will not warrant the expense of a wire for their own use exclusively The new system transfers a wire simultaneously at both ends from one pair of subscribers to another every five minutes if desired. The service is divided into segments, and if a subscriber and his correspondent are connected at one segment they can communicate for five minutes each hour by paying the minimum fixed yearly rental for these facilities.

Should they find that their business required ten minutes each hour they could be connected to two adjoining segments, or, if preferred, to one segment on each side of the segment eircle, which would enable them to communicate for five minutes every half hour. Other subscribers would have the line for whatever portion of the time they arranged for, the object being to accommodate subscribers with whatever facilities they choose to pay for.-New York Telegram.

How Some Words Were Derived. A stentorian voice is that of one like the Grecian herald in the Trojan war, whom Homer describes as "great hearted, brazen voiced Stentor, accustomed to shout as loud as fifty other men." A ragian is a loose overcoat with long sleeves, such as Lord Ragian wore in the Crimean war. Wellingtons are boots named after the Iron Duke. Bluchers are also boots, named after one point we passed a high hill with a the commander of Wellington's Prussian allies at Waterloo. Any magnificent tomb is called a mansoleum. Mansolus, the Carian king whose name it bears, had nothing whatever to do with the original except to lie in it when he was dead. The plety of his wife, Artemisla, gave his name to the tomb and immertality to her husband's memory, because the monument she built over his body gave a word to language. The mag nolla bears the name of Pierre Magnol, professor of medicine at Montpellier, and Dahl, a Swedish botanist, has his name embalmed in the dahlia.-Harper's Young People.
