TRENTON'S ESCAPED BEAR,

Kitty Hill Has Been Dodging Bullets in Part of Jersey for Two Years. There is a bear in New Jersey that lives a charmed life. She mingles more or less with civilization, but yet is her own mistress. This is the bear that created much havoe in Somerset, Mereer, Hunterdon and Burlington counties, and seems to be bullet proof and trap wise. She is now giving the farm ers of the upper part of Mercer county a lively existence.

She is the same bear that escaped two summers ago from the Trenton city park under sensational circumstances. She was then a cub, purchased for the park in the Pocono mountains by Councilman Edmund C. Hill, who started the little zoological and prevent they also contains the contains the part of the contains they also contains the contains they also contains the contains t garden which delights the children of Trenton. When the bear arrived at the Clinton street station by express the box was roughly tumbled from the car and fell apart.

The cub showed her teeth, and at once got the right of way. She dashed across the lawn, and finding an opening in the fence, entered the yard of the hotel near the depot. She proceeded through the kitchen and wandered into the barroom, which was at the time filled. The presence of the cub cleaned out the barroom.

The cub followed to the street, but met with a reception of flying brick, and then she took refuge in the Mercer cemetery opposite the station, where dred excited men and boys, and was Small Pill. Small Doss. Small Price. finally lassoed by a colored man. The bear pit at the park was not yet ready for the cub's reception, so she was locked up in the barn, and the news papers, out of admiration for the preco Pacific & Northwestern line. Magciousness of the cub, called it Kitty nificent Pullman and Wagner sleep committee.

The park guards gave a lively chase, and Kitty saved her bacon by swimming from one side of the canal to the other until she distanced them; then she took to the woods. Since then she has been a veritable tourist, and has managed to keep out of the range of bullets and clubs and lived on the fat of the land.

She has disturbed the suburban quietness of many places, but defied all the ingenious plans of men to capture her. Her appearance in Mercer county, only a few miles from the park, is a matter of surprise. Those who have seen her say that she is large and fat. She is now in the great Bear swamp, five miles above Trenton, where she is safe unless hunger causes her to wander.—Philadelphia Press.

The slave dealers extend their activity even to the very doors of Biskra, the headquarters of the order of the Warrior Monks of the Sahara, and one of the most dramatic features of the ceremony of the consecration of the monks was when Cardinal Lavigerie led to the RICE & ROSS, Blacksmiths, all kinds of in our employ arthur Glove, a professional horseshoer. altar a little brown girl, barely nine years old, who had succeeded in concealing herself and in effecting her escape from a slave caravan passing through the desert a few miles to the south of Biskra. A sudden movement of the child caused her to drop something that she was holding concealed beneath the folds of her djebba. The venerable prelate bent down and raised it from the ground.

It was a small, dusky hand-the hand of the little girl who stood beside him, and which in sheer wanton cruelty had been cut off by her captors. Holding it aloft, and pointing it southward toward the great Sahara, while with his own hand he raised the child's arm, so that all present could see the mangled stump, the cardinal exclaimed, in tones which seemed to ring forth as a clarion: "I would to God that all Europe could see this little hand! May it serve to direct your line of march. En avant for God, for France and for humanity!"—Harper's Weekly.
