SECONDHAND BARRELS.

Grave Dangers Lurk in the Use of These Common Receptacles.

Secondhand barrels play a more important part in the storage of the food products used in the city and its environs—in Brooklyn, on Long Island and throughout no inconsiderable portion of the state of New Jersey—than most housekeepers, or for that matter, most people, are aware. But few if any new barrels are made in this locality. New barrels are made and exclusively used in the west. It is western made barrels recaptured that are used hereabout. These recaptured barrels are used for packing biscuits, sugar, fruit, eggs, butter and other kinds of food products.

The newly made barrels come hither from the west filled with flour and other food stuffs, from the fishing centers crammed with captured denizens of the deep, and from other places laden with delicacies intended to tempt the appetites of citizens of the Empire State. When they are emptied the retail provision dealers who purchase their contents sell them indiscriminately to all comers willing to pay the price, which is generally from ten to fifteen cents or upward for each barrel.

The inhabitants of the tenement houses in the eastern district of the city are among the largest purchasers. The people living in the poorer districts on the west side are also large purchasers. It is from the epidemic localities, particularly those on the east side, owners of cooperages in this city and Brooklyn buy a large proportion of the secondhand barrels they rejuvenate. But it is not only the proprietors of cooperages who do so. Biscuit manufacturers and representatives of sugar houses do likewise.

The cast-off barrels sold to the inhabitants of tenement houses are used for holding dirt, ashes, dead rats and other kinds of vermin, cast off clothing and underclothing that often contain germs of malignant disease, and would not have been parted with by their impudic owners except through necessity.

Recapture of these secondhand barrels is carried on to a large extent in this vicinity. Five firms alone recopper over 22,000 barrels daily, and in sugar houses and biscuit bakeries probably 6,000 more are daily recoppered.

Over twenty-two years ago a Brooklyn assemblyman—Samuel Maddox—introduced a bill into the state legislature to prohibit the packing of food products in secondhand barrels. The bill was withdrawn owing to circumstances. Tradition says that over $30,000 was put up to defeat it.

The price paid journeymen for recopering is 34 cents a barrel. Experts say that careful washing and cleaning would be sufficient to purify secondhand barrels for the use of food products.—New York Advertiser.

The Best Protection.

The marked and sudden changes of temperature to which our climate is subjected during the winter months are not to be combated by changes of clothing, for this would be obviously impossible. The thing to be done is to keep the body in a condition to resist the changes. This condition is best maintained by having the skin and all the organs active. The degree of sensitivity of the skin in regulating heat loss is the largest factor here concerned, and a sound condition of the skin is to be expected from a proper system of exercise and bathing.—Youth's Companion.

Giving Orders to a Pope.

Mr. George Healy, an American portrait painter, tells an interesting anecdote regarding Pope Pius IX. His holiness was sitting for his portrait, and becoming tired suddenly stood up and came over to see what Mr. Healy was about. Mr. Healy was annoyed at this, and exclaimed somewhat sharply: "I beg your holiness to sit down. The pope laughed and said: "I am accustomed to give orders, not to receive them. But you see, Mr. Healy, that I also know how to obey." With this he submissively went back to his chair.

The Funniest Sight in Paris.

The funniest sight in Paris is to see the bears in the pits at the Jardin des Plantes seat themselves comfortably, hold up their forelegs in a position of supplication and, with wide open mouths, beg for buns, their eyes rapidly blinking in the strong light from above. They easily catch in their mouths anything that they can reach without moving off their bases.—New York Sun.

War in Washington.

The citizens of Oakesdale, Wash., annoyed by a large mudhole in the main street of the town, planted three or four old hats and a pair of boots in the center of it and labeled them with the names of the city council. But the council retaliated by posting up a card with the notice: "Pay your taxes and we will fill this hole."—Philadelphia Ledger.

VANISHING OF A CONTINENT.

There Was a Real Atlantis, About Which the Geologists Tell Stories. "Atlantis, the supposititious continent in the midst of the Atlantic ocean, of which so many remarkable stories are told, is undoubtedly a myth, but it is entirely certain that there was a real Atlantis," said Professor Magee, of the geological survey.

"During that ancient epoch which we call the paleozoic, nobody knows how many millions of years ago, there was a great and lofty continent in the middle of what is now known as the North Atlantic ocean. It was about 1,000 miles long from north to south, and nobody knows how wide it was. All we can tell is that its mountains were very high, and that on its western slope it had long and large rivers. It was a mighty land mass, and we have reason for being sure that it endured ages before, at the close of the paleozoic, it had sunk to the level of the sea. Subsequently, though further sinking, it became a part of what is now the level plain of the Atlantic.

"How do we know all this, you asked? By the traces of its former existence which this geological Atlantis had left behind in the shape of sediments deposited by its rivers. Where are these sediments found? Well, the Appalachian mountains are entirely composed of them. In that distant age of which we are speaking the eastern part of the United States had not yet been uplifted above the ocean. When this portion of the continent did emerge from the sea the sediments I have spoken of came up with it, forming the Appalachian range among other features of what is now the land. We know that the rivers of the vanished continent must have been long and large, because no small streams could have transported such sediment.

"You may well imagine how interesting it must be to the geologist to explore, hammer in hand, the Appalachian hills for fossil forms of life which existed upon this ancient and mysterious land mass so many thousands of centuries ago. Of the climate of the geological Atlantis this much may be said: It was very warm and moist, the air probably so laden with carbonic acid gas that mammals, had there been any, could hardly have breathed it with comfort. Malaria and other miasmatic diseases were afloat in the atmosphere. Conditions were more unfavorable for human life than they are now in that dreadful region known as the Delta of the Ganges, where Europeans are unable to survive.

"The land of the vanished continent was covered with rank and gigantic growths, notably with huge pines and giant mosses—the coal plants destined to furnish fuel eventually to mankind. These plants grew more luxuriantly near the sea. It was a great time for insects, especially cockroaches. The paleozoic, you will remember, is called the age of cockroaches, because of the enormous numbers of them found in fossil shape in the strata laid down during the epoch. Ages were yet to pass by before mammals could appear upon the scene.

"In the seas around about the continent gigantic sharks and armored fishes disported themselves, together with marine reptiles, great and small. The time which has elapsed since then is so vast that science does not attempt to make any estimate respecting its duration. So many millions of years have gone by since the real Atlantis sank out of sight beneath the ocean that the period is an eternity compared with the brief span of a single human life."—Washington Star.

Before Starting on a Journey

A person usually desires to gain some information as to the most desirable route to take, and will purchase tickets via the one that will afford him the quickest and best service. Before starting on a trip to Chicago or any point East, you should provide yourself with a map and time table of the Wisconsin Central Line. The trains run on this route are equipped with Pullman's latest Drawing Room sleepers, elegant Day Coaches and Dining Cars of latest design, built expressly for the service, and are exquisite in furnishings and convenient and comfortable in arrangement and so complete in every detail that they have no superior in comfort and elegance. The dining car service is pronounced by all the most elegant ever inaugurated, and is operated in the late east of its kind.

Fast trains via the Wisconsin Central leave Minneapolis daily at 7:45 p. m., and 6:25 p. m., and St. Paul at 1:50 p. m., and 7:15 p. m., making favorable connections with all the trains from the West and South-west.
