the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and eathy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bow-dis is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organised supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fall to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organised linear the organised finite and the organised linear the organised of the cause of the trouble the importance of this fact, but treat the organised linear the organism of the land.
