The Wheat Crop.

Opinions differ as to the effect of the cold rains on the winter wheat crop. On low wet land the abundance of old moisture is undoubtedly causing it to turn yellow and red, and preventing it from stooling out as it should to make a heavy crop. On higher land and hill land the cool, rainy weather is undoubtedly beneficial. Large wheat growers say this wet weather is just the thing. They say dry weather at this time would cut the crop short, prevent it from stooling out, and ruin the prospect. So far as the fruit crop is concerned, all the damage that frosts can do has been accomplished, and as usual there will be abundance of fruit.
