Instead of half a dozen seperate schools of music in this city or state, Salem could just as well have one large institution with five hundred or a thousand students, and draw here artists of a higher rank, who would still farther add to the reputation of the city. Just as these larger musical aggregations can appear here by co-operation, so the highest talent would become available with larger classes of students, more opportunity for developing special lines of work, and enough support concentrated here to make it pay artists of great calebrity to come and live and work at Salem and here build up a life work that would in turn spread the fame of

The number of trusts given is 150, with a capitalization of $2,238,698,000. The clause of the Sherman anti-trust law is also given, which declares all such combinations illegal and imposes a fine of not exceeding $5,000 on any person who shall engage in any such combination. This law was declared constitutional by the supreme court, and the railroad 'Joint Traffic Association" was knocked out. Still the trusts go right on doing business at the old stand, and those now in process of formation reach a capitalization of $240,000,000.

FOUR ELECTIONS OF INTEREST

For an off year in politics there are, nevertheless, four elections of na tional interest to occur in 1899. State officers are to be chosen in Iowa, Ohio Kentucky and Maryland, and national issues are quite likely to be the key notes of the campaign. In Ohio the Democrats will strive to lay the foundation upon which the presidential contest will be built. The state legislature was saved to the Republicans by only a narrow majority at the last election, and this has given courage to the Democrats to fight harder than ever. On the other hand, the Republicans are determined the president's own state shall endorse his administration by piling up Republican majorities larger than ever before known. If Congressman Grosvenor should be the Republican candidate for governor, as now seems probable, a campaign on national issues would be un-
