SALEM SUMMER SCHOOLS

Prof. Kraps and Co. Supt. Jones Open on Their Second Week.

Importance of the Study of English Language and Literature—Prof. Garland's School.

The second week of Prof. Kraps and Co. Supt. Jones's Summer school opened Wednesday with a fair attendance. The first of the series of lectures on language and literature—the Anglo-Saxon period—was presented with following

PLEA FOR ENGLISH.

I would inspire you to become life students of our glorious literature and language—the vehicle for carrying forward the mighty conquests of civilization, material, intellectual and spiritual, upon which the English speaking race has entered. The world needs the truth expressed by good writers. There is such thing as science of expression, acquisition of culture, development of all the faculties God has given us—it is the ultimate duty we owe ourselves and society.

Without a broad, well-grounded knowledge of the masterpieces of literature—without literary culture, there is no well balanced intellectual or spiritual development possible.

Without an enthusiasm for culture founded upon an acquaintance with some great literature—and English is now the world's greatest—there is no arousing of the imaginative faculties, the creative instinct,—no writers, poets, orators, musicians, or artists in the true sense.

The study of English Literature takes us more deeply into the history of the race than the study of history itself, because literature includes the thought, the morality, the spiritual power of the race itself. Literature is the survival of the enduring products of the best brain power of the race—that has been sifted by the ages, that has been subjected to the tests of time, the critical faculty of cultivated minds. In literature the chaff has been blown away, the trash destroyed, we have only the genuine metal remaining and being constantly refined.

By culture we become citizens not of one state or nation, but of the whole world. We feel at home in any company. The individual assumes a harmonious relation to all society, becomes independent of the accidents of birth, fortune and environment. The purpose of culture must be "to form judicious readers, intelligent writers, well-equipped speakers; to minister to breadth of thought and beneficence of feeling; to strengthen faith and kindle hope; to multiply our sense of the true, the pure and the beautiful."

Without a study of the fundamental facts of English Literature, without appreciating our connection through literature with English history, ancient and modern,—a nation's literature is the outcome of its whole life—"no man can understand the American mind, or estimate rightly the tendencies of the race. Strictly speaking we have no American language, no American literature. A century of progress and development has not perceptibly disturbed or even influenced the wonderful amalgamation of race and speech we may call the English speaking world. No one can study our literature without having a higher conception of the destiny of the English speaking race. It has been maintained in a series of articles in the Atlantic Monthly the past year that the study of English and English literature, if properly pursued, will yield, at a far less cost of time and effort, greater culture than can be got from Greek and Latin. It is proven in these articles by able scholars that the more thorough study of English will give us a juster perception of the life we lead in the world "here" and "now."

The unusual richness of the English peculiarly fits it to be an instrument for the most thorough culture and that the study of the English language and literature must be more closely identified in the thought of the best educators. The study of our language and literature has been held to be the exclusive privilege of literary persons, whereas Mark H. Liddell says in the July Atlantic "that most men and women who can read and think are capable of literary appreciation," meaning from the root-words—to set a proper value on, to esteem rightly. Our knowledge of language is only improved and perfected, as it was first acquired, by putting ourselves in the position of learners, by following the example of those who speak better than we do. If we are really in earnest to complete the mastery of any language we should begin with our mother tongue. While the encyclopedic English language contains upwards of 200,000 words, Shakespear uses only about 15,000, Milton 8000, there are but from 3000 to 5000 used in ordinary cultivated intercourse.

To acquire the latest conception of the magnitude of the English language we must refer to the new Oxford dictionary that is being published in England. It has 60,549 words recorded under the letters A. B. C., and 136,611 words and including the letter I. It will contain 13,000 pages, is the work of 1300 persons, who have taken 3 1/2 million quotations from 5000 English authors. It will be more than one-half larger than the Century Dictionary.

How shall we proceed to acquire culture in English?

1. By resolving to become a student of our language and literature through reading, writing, and memorizing from its masterpieces, such as the common version of the Bible, Shakespear, Milton, Macaulay and Webster.

2. By gaining a fundamental comprehension of the history, development and philosophy of our literature.

3. By resolving to master the spelling, meaning and pronunciation of any word that we have not already mastered.

In this way, not at all difficult, any one who can read and write English may begin at any time of life to acquire an University education. We need but a small number of books, but a firm determination to conquer.

That great English grammarian, Liddell, says:

It is associative interest, therefore, that the student of English literature must get hold of. But it will not always be easy for him to find it. He must first of all be a thorough student of English, and English in all its forms.

Our danger is from not knowing we are thinkers of English, and not knowing the life of English letters. It is in the divorce of the study of English literature from our English-thinking life that the danger lies. And our English-thinking life will never be clear to us until we understand our English speech. There is where we must start, and down in our common schools. So that every American, whether he can think the thought of Plato or not, will know that his own speech is the speech of Chaucer and Shakespear and Milton still living and vital, perfected in efficiency and fitness by centuries of daily use.

And when there comes to us that rich development of literature that usually follows a period of intense political, social and intellectual activity, by a third of a century or so, we shall be ready to recognize it and welcome it. And our recognition will be a help and a stimulus to make it richer and stronger than it would otherwise have been. Nay, may we not hope for another such burst of thought as the one that gave us Shakespear, and look for another Shakespear to crown it all—another Shakespear to whom some patient teacher in a public school may even now be giving his first instruction in English.

Valuable Testimony

Is at hand in abundance to establish the claim of extraordinary durability, and to prove the satisfaction experienced by Victor riders, they do more to sell Victors than any other item of advertising. A well-known gentleman said in our hearing today: "I cannot conceive why people will buy other wheels, unknown and untried, paying nearly as much for them as would buy a Victor. They do not seem to realize that they spend many times the difference in the first cost in repairs, besides never having the satisfaction of a good reliable mount." At the same time he showed his wheel, a "99 Victor," which had been subjected to the most unreasonably hard treatment, upon which not a cent had been spent for breakage, though ridden by a speedy, heavy-weight rider, over country roads, stubble fields and ditches.

"99 Victors" are better than ever, sold by H. S. Gile & Co., Insurance Bldg., Victor Spinneller's can now be had with only a few days' delay.

Price 25c. and 50c. eod&w

A Valuable Dog. wouldn't sell for ten cents to a man who doesn't want a dog. And that is true with most anything else.

The only expeditious way to find a man who wants to buy a dog is to speak to everybody in Salem through THE JOURNAL want columns.

Those who are interested will respond. And it would be a very uninteresting dog indeed that wouldn't suit anybody.

Most anything you don't want can be sold at some price if properly advertised.
