MR. CHAMBERLAIN'S DEFENCE OF THE BRITISH POLICY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. Chamberlain, the British Colonial secretary met with a stormy reception in parliament in presenting his defence of the policy of England in South Africa. But upon division he received the support of the entire conservative Union party—361 to 135.

His speech showed that the criticism of Sir John Stanhope, (implying that Chamberlain and Sir John Milner had incurred the charge of fomenting a war with the South African Republic) had touched a vital spot in the situation. His reply was so violent as to call forth a rebuke from the speaker, and Chamberlain hastily withdrew his offensive language and proceeded more deliberately to state the position of the British toward the Transvaal.

Mr. Chamberlain proceeded to eulogize the South African league as one of the poorest but "most representative political organizations ever established." Then he drew a cheer by referring to Cecil Rhodes, the multi-millionaire at the head of it, as having gone to face danger at Kimberly. He declared that in all his dealings with Kruger he had kept two thoughts uppermost, "justice for Britons in South Africa, and to maintain the paramountcy of Great Britain."

The question of British paramountcy he defined as not meaning paramountcy over the German or Portuguese possessions, but "in the two Boer REPUBLICS and the British colonies." And then he concluded with emphasis:

"Every one on both sides of the house is determined to maintain these great principles. The peace of South Africa depends upon Great Britain accepting responsibility in the Transvaal." He declares that every step taken by the Boers has been "to oust the queen from her position as Suzerain," and he added a sentence which reveals the real offence of the Boer republic.

"Now they have thrown off the mask and declared themselves a sovereign, independent state. Her majesty's government has had a suspicion, amounting to knowledge, that the mission of Dr. Leyds has been one continual series of negotiations with foreign powers against the British."

This we think makes clear at least the mental attitude of the present British ministry towards the Transvaal and Orange Free State Republics. Their aim consists of a desire to oust the Queen as a sovereign from South Africa, and to establish themselves as "sovereign independent states." Our readers will do well to grasp this clearly.

It is recalled in this connection that among Sir Alfred Milner's accusations against the Boers, found in the British blue books, great prominence is given to their agitating constantly for a greater South African Republic. They stand for the Republican-Democratic idea of self-government, as opposed to the monarchial-imperial conception of a vast empire with colonial annexes.

The meagre reports of Chamberlain's speech that reach us by telegraph may not disclose the British policy toward South Africa, but this much is clear it seems to us; the Boer contention is for a Republic; the British contention is for the maintenance of the so-called "integrity of the British empire," and the annexation if they are strong enough of territory upon any pretext or over any controversy in which the British can involve the people of a neighboring or distant territory.

So the real question for each man to settle, whether he be an American or an Englishman or a German or a Canadian or a Frenchman, is this: am I for the British monarchial system, or am I for the Republic system? Stripped of all disguise, of all question of gold fields, right of franchise, right of native, or right of outlander, that is the real issue that is involved in the Boer war.

American can hardly help sympathizing with the Boer republics. Their history is much the same as that of the American colonist. They were pilgrims about the same time to the Cape of Good Hope that the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock. They subdued savage races, conquered a wilderness, established the embry institutions out of which grew religious and political freedom, rebelled against the British monarchy, and to escape it withdrew into the interior, and again conquered the wilderness and established after many tribulations two WHITE REPUBLICS.

Can England succeed in the overthrow of these two Republics? Can England check the tendency to establish a federated Republic of South Africa? Is it right to impose the British monarchial system upon that vast undeveloped region? Or should the aspirations of the white populations to become sovereign independent Republics be carried into successful realizations? Time, truth and destiny only can answer.

If the American colonists had been crushed in their war against British demands, would resistance have ceased? Would they not have "trooked" into the interior and founded a new Republic just as the Boers did? Would our colonial forefathers have accepted monarchial rule had they been whipped at Yorktown? Will England, whipping the Boers in a dozen battles destroy, the spirit of independence in those people?

We predict not. The spirit of liberty, resistance to tyranny and to the domination of aristocracy and capitalistic class rule does not die out in a day or a year. Kruger's utterance that South Africa must become free or become the white man's grave will become prophetic. A confederation of independent South African Republics is as inevitable as a confederation of the Canadian states or

MINING LETTER

From the Rich Mineral Region Lying About Mount Baker.

Description of Baker Lake—Following the Trail Over the Glacier to the Famous Mines.

LYMAN, Skagit County, Wash., Oct. 17, 1899.—Since my last article, which appeared in your columns a few weeks ago, I have been on a tour of inspection through the vast and unexplored mineral section surrounding Mount Baker, and as few descriptions of the romantic and lovely scenery of that portion of our coast have ever been written perhaps a brief account of our trip may be interesting to some of your readers although I feel myself inadequate to the task of describing the grand and awe inspiring scenes it was my fortune to behold.

Accounts of rich and extensive mineral loaves discovered in that locality induced me to make a flying visit to the head of Sulphides creek, a tributary of Baker river about 12 miles above the lake. There I secured two mining locations and at once returned to this place for the purpose of recording them and found Mr. Chas. Thrasher a well known mining expert awaiting me and anxious to visit the district and in his company started on a desert trip. After procuring a first class outfit at the store of Mr. T. W. B. Thomson an enterprising merchant in Hamilton who is extensively interested in mining himself, we started up the river in a heavy rain. Night found us at a deserted ranch on Baker river about 12 miles above the month. Wet, cold, weary and hungry we were glad of the opportunity of cooking a hot supper under an old shed that afforded a slight protection from the rain and afterwards spread our blankets on some hay in the barn, where in spite of the cold and wet condition of our bedding we enjoyed to its fullest extent that calm and restful repose that is the reward of severe toil. Early the next morning we were again on the road, the rain still falling in torrents, and about noon we reached the ranch of Mr. Ruth at the foot of the lake.

The owner and his family being absent, we quietly appropriated some potatoes and onions from the garden, made a good fire in his woodshed and cooked dinner, after which we put our horses in his pasture and wrote a note, detailing the particulars of our depredations, which we fastened to the door of his house and then embarked in a canoe on the lake. Baker Lake is a lovely and placid sheet of water about two miles in length and of an average width of one and a half miles. Its altitude is 1,500 feet above sea level and lying as it does at the base of mountains rising almost perpendicular to a height of 8,000 or 10,000 feet above the water, it is as completely protected from violent winds as if enclosed within walls. There are one or two small islands in the lake and considerable shallow water at its upper end, but the average depth near the center is 120 feet. Millions of trout, salmon and white fish disport in its waters, while not a few ducks are seen lazily floating on its surface. A more delightful summer resort for fishing and hunting parties I have never seen, and when it becomes better known I have no doubt but what it will be extensively patronized. On the south side of the lake and about a mile from Ruth's ranch, the government fish hatchery is situated and affords an extremely pleasing, as well as instructive, lesson in fiscal matters to all who visit. Mr. H. H. Buck, the superintendent, is a well informed and courteous gentleman, received us with great cordiality and spent several hours in showing us over the establishment and explaining the manner of propagating the finny delicacies. They have now over twelve millions of salmon eggs, principally of the sockeye species, undergoing the process of incubation, and expect to add considerably to that number before the season is closed. About 93 per cent of the eggs are usually successfully hatched and the young fish returned to the lake 40 days after emerging from the egg, when they are presumed to be old enough to take care of themselves. That voracious mountain trout known as the Dolly Varden is abundant in those waters and the worst enemy of the young fish. As to whether any protection should be afforded those piratical reprobates or not is a matter of opinion. Their destructive qualities may be estimated from the fact that from 15 to 20 young salmon have frequently been found in the stomach of one of those voracious gluttons, but they are a delicious table fish and very game. There are 14 men employed at the hatchery during the fishing season and five during the winter, including the watchmen who are constantly on hand night and day, as the slightest mishap in the arrangement of the water flow might result in the loss of millions of eggs. After spending an hour or so at the hatchery we bade farewell to the genial superintendent and refusing his hospitable invitation to remain for supper embarked on a good trail took us from the landing to the hospitable home of Mr. Robert Shannon, a hunter and trapper who has resided in that section for many years; and here I wish I could find language to adequately express my thanks and appreciation of the kindness shown us by our hospitable entertainer and his ladylike wife. When I say the latter is an admirable specimen of the better class of American ladies I can pay her no higher compliment. Kind, courteous and intelligent she is withal an excellent housewife, and if there was anything I enjoyed more than her conversation it was—ah, well—her cookery. Leaving Mr. Shannon early the following morning we were compelled to make the rest of our journey on foot, each man carrying his camping outfit and provisions for four days, tightly strapped on his back. Were it not for obstructions in the shape of fallen timber and underbrush, the trail might be considered a good one; but climbing over large trees, many of them forty feet in diameter, with sixty or seventy pounds on your back, is an ordeal calculated to test alike the sinews and patience of any man; but the alluring bait of prospective wealth, is an admirable stimulant, by the aid of which we safely accomplished our task and reached the mineral locations that night. These lie for the most part in a large basin at the head of Sulphides creek and consist of extensive veins of copper, galena and gold with small strata of melindum intervening the whole being covered with an iron capping which the recent sliding of a glacier has removed to some extent and thus exposed the ore. It is necessary to cross the same, which now lies at the foot of the mountains, in order to reach the mines. It is premature to express any opinion yet as to their value, but lying as they do on the same belt as the rich mines controlled by Thomas and Edgar on the one side and the famous Post Lambert mine on the other, there is every ground for believing them of great value. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube.
