Let the greatest athlete have dyspepsin Let the greatest athlete have dyspepsia and his muscles would soon fall. Physical strength is derived from food. If a man has insufficient food he loses atrength. If he has no food he dies. Food is converted into nutrition through the stomach and bowels. It depends on the strength of the stomach to what extent food caten is digested and assimilated. People can die of starvation who have abundant food to eat, when the stomach and its associate organs of digestion and abundant food to eat, when the stomach and its associate organs of digestion and nutrition do not perform their duty. Thus the stomach is really the vital organ of the body. If the stomach is "weak" the body will be weak also, because it is upon the stomach the body relies for its strength. And as the body, considered as a whole, is made up of its several members and organs, so the weakness of the body as a consequence of "weak" stomach will be distributed among the organs which compose the body. If the body is weak because it is ill-nourished that physical weakness will be found in body is weak because it is ill-nourished that physical weakness will be found in all the organs—bears, fiver, kidneys, etc. The liver will be torpid and inactive, giving rise to bilicusness, less of appelle, weak nerves, feeble or irregular action of heart, palpitation, diztness, headache, backache and kindred disturbances and weaknesses.
