GREAT COAL FIELD OF SOUTHERN ALASKA

Senator Piles Calls Government's Attention to Accessible Coal Supply in Speaking on Alaska-Yukon Exposition

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Feb. 3.—While all government naval vessels on the Pacific coast is transported there from the great coal deposits lying in the Alaska peninsula, the Alaska-Yukon exposition, to be held in Seattle next year, Senator Piles, of Washington, said:
"It needs no exaggerated statement to emphasize the value of the coal fields so situated. The government certainly is interested in developing this resource. Introduction of Alaska coal would save the government in the navy alone a very large sum every year."

PORTUGAL FACES A BLOODY REVOLUTION

Affairs Almost In a State of Anarchy and It Is Possible Carlo's Assassination May Lead to a Republic

(United Press Leased Wire.)
Lisbon, Feb. 3.—King Carlos, of Portugal and the crown prince, Luiz-Philippe, were assassinated Saturday. The king's second son, Infant Manuel, was slightly wounded, but Queen Amelia, who strove to save the crown prince's life, by throwing herself upon him, was unhurt.

Lisbon, Feb. 3.—Portugal, robbed at one blow of a king and a crown prince by the bullets from carbines of a group of assassins, is quiet today, a monarchy still under the rule of the boy king, Don Manuel II, and the Premier Franco. If the regicides who let fly the fatal volley believed that their act would set fire the flames of rebellion; upset the government and establish a republic, they have been grievously mistaken. The house of Braganza has paid its toll for the folly of its head, and apparently the dynasty has saved its throne.

Lisbon is quiet today, as it was last night. The shops are reopening. Patrons are seen on the street cars; flags are at half-mast; decorators are beginning to shroud the public buildings in black.

At the royal palace the attendants state that Queen Amelia sleeps, exhausted by her 18-hour vigil at the biers of her husband and her first born, she was carried to her bed late last night, and gradually slipped into a deep slumber.
Stunned at the work of the assassins the kingdom has followed the lead of the capital city, and remained quiet. At Oporto a battalion of infantry revolted upon hearing the news of the assassination and declared for the republic, but the loyal troops arrested the mutineers without a fight. This is the only news of any trouble occasioned by the blow that struck the ruling house.

There are without doubt hundreds of people in Lisbon and the kingdom who would welcome a republic, but the diffident ones are without a leader, without a definite plan of action and without the power to work in co-operation. Franco, the premier, is still the dictator of Portugal. The government now rests completely in his hands, and in this hour he looms up trunk, head and shoulders above his compatriots and his enemies. It is to him whom the friends of Portugal look to rebuild the wrecked structure of her prostrate government.

Powerful as he is, Franco is faced by a problem in reconstruction that will tax all of his undoubted genius for government. His cabinet has fallen him. By a large mass of the people he is held in distrust. The new king fears him as the inspiration of those stern measures that aroused the anger of the people, which culminated in the assassination. England, it is said, wants the dictatorship of Franco done away with. King Edward advised Carlos to put away his powerful advisor long ago, but Carlos, too weak to rule alone, feared to take the step that would mean a long and desperate battle with the forces of both the progressives. It is believed that a portion of the English fleet is now en route from Vigo, Spain, for Portugal, to be ready to intervene in case of a rebellion. Positive information comes from London that such an order has been issued.

Madrid, Feb. 3.—The cruiser Princess of Austria has been ordered to Lisbon to protect the Spanish colony, in case of revolution.

London, Feb. 3.—So strict is the censorship in Lisbon that the stories of the assassination of King Carlos and son, with the events following the tragedy, are confusing and contradictory in many particulars. Official information is that Premier Franco has the situation well in hand but rumors are reported indicating that Lisbon is still a seething volcano, and that many other cities are on the verge of revolt and that the position of the new king is precarious in the extreme. There seems little doubt that the regicides intend to wipe out the entire royal family, kill the premier, ministerial colleagues, and probably proclaim a republic.

Dispatches confirm the report that the leader of the regicides was Sergeant Manuel Bulca, of the Seventh cavalry. He was killed. The others were clerks.

Though some uncertainty about the hour at which Franco's assassination was attempted, there is no doubt such an attempt was made.

The reports are that a band surrounded his house, fired on the guards and were repulsed.

Republicans deny they were concerned in the assassination plot.

Franco is trying to arrest the leaders of the party, evidently believing that prominent men in the organization are responsible for the monarch's death. Today's reports seem to make it certain that Admiral Amaral will become premier in the coalition government.

There was a slight depression in the foreign market today as a result of the assassination. Portuguese securities have fallen two points.

Physicians fear for the sanity of Queen Amelia. Her majesty has wept and wailed intermittently ever since the tragedy, refusing to leave the bodies, and piteously begs to follow them to the tomb.

Young Manuel, the new king, is giving satisfaction.

Lisbon, Feb. 3.—The dictatorship of Franco is ended. The new cabinet formed today is:

Admiral Ferreira Do Amaral, premier; Mathias Nunse, minister of marine; Teira Do Sousa, minister of finance; Semhor Borlao, minister of the interior; Wenceslau Do Lima, minister of foreign affairs; Jose V. Alptom, minister of justice; Jose Azavedo, minister of public works. Not a member of the Franco cabinet remains. Officially he is shorn of power, but many believe, however, he will remain the power behind the throne. English influence weighed heavily in the selection of Manuel's new advisors. Manuel held the initial session cabinet today.

"I am without experience in science or politics," he said, appealingly. "I place myself entirely in your hands, needing, believing in your patriotism and wisdom."

The Imperial hotel, costing $30,000, was opened at Newberg Saturday, the occasion being celebrated with a big banquet.
