"My three year old boy was badly constipated, had a high fever and was in awful condition. I gave him two doses of Foley's Orino Laxative and the next morning the fever was gone and he was entirely well. Foley's Orino Laxative saved his life." A. Wolkush, Cashier, Wis. J. C. Perry.

That "Sea Railroad."

The "short talk" in the February 15th number, replying to the question about the longest bridge in the world, came nearer expressing a popular conception of the remarkable railroad now nearly completed on the Florida Keys, from the extreme south end of that state's main land to Key West, than it did to correctly answering the question. The Florida Keys are small coral islands off the south end of the state, and among them is a chain running in almost an air line from where the road leaves the main land to Key West, about 60 miles. Some of these keys have an area of several square miles, and the spaces between them are short, with one exception, from Long Key to Knight's Key, two and three-fourths miles, and this is spanned by a great concrete viaduct of the length mentioned

Special Notice—I have been informed by several of my customers that it is reported I am going to leave Salem and move my stock to Portland. I now give notice to my customers and whom it may concern. I intend to do business at the same old stand for years to come, so far as I know, but will give due notice of any change. W. A. Irvin, grocer, corner Court and Commercial streets. 3-23-tf composed of massive steel reinforced arches, carrying the road 25 feet above the water. With this exception there is no remarkable bridge work, from the engineering standpoint, on the road. In some cases the keys are connected by rock fills, in others by trestles, and a few viaducts much shorter than the one just referred to. The keys constitute so much of the road bed that the traveler has a sense of being on land nearly all the time, and therefore misses the sensation which he naturally expected to feel when he read of "going to sea by rail." The road is really a wonderful one, doubtless the most costly one of the same length ever built, but to the traveler who knows nothing of it but what he sees it is disappointing.—Ex.

A plan has been perfected to widen the channel through the Lachine rapids in the St. Lawrence river and to span them with a bridge.
