GOVERNOR DENIES OREGONIAN STORY

August 26, 1914. The author of the story in this morning's Oregonian, in which it was stated that four interstate bridge meetings had been recently deferred because of absence, such action being necessary on account of my being chairman, has either been misinformed or deliberately lied, because:

1st. I attended the last meeting held by the Interstate Bridge Commission and no meetings have since been called or postponed.

2nd. While the law provides that the Governor shall be chairman of the Interstate Bridge Commission, the said commission elected Mr. Rufus Holman chairman.

3rd. A meeting of the Oregon members of the commission, for the purpose of considering certain matters covering the Oregon approach, was suggested a couple of weeks ago. I was on hand but was advised by the deputy district attorney that the meeting was deferred because of the fact that matters had not been gotten together in such a shape as to warrant the holding of the meeting; and that I would be notified when it was called.

4th. That the meeting yesterday was a meeting of the Multnomah county bonding committee—consisting of the three county commissioners—to open bids for the sale of the bridge bonds. This is a matter wholly under the control of the county commissioners, and this office has no more control over the situation than it would have over the sale of bonds in Clarke county, Washington.

5th. Had my presence been needed for any purpose at the meeting held yesterday I would gladly have been present had I been notified in time. The first I knew of the meeting was yesterday, Mr. Holman having notified me at noon that a meeting of the bonding committee had been held at 10 o'clock but that no bids for bonds had been received. He stated that another meeting would be held at 2 p. m., to give Mr. George M. Hyland and others a hearing. Having engagements in Salem that afternoon, I was not in position to stop over.

I do not know who is responsible for the story appearing in the Oregonian, but whoever is responsible ought to be ashamed of himself because it was so cheap, so cowardly, so unfair and so untruthful. I do not propose to be used as a goat in this matter.

SEATTLE STEAMER

Sampson was built in Philadelphia in 1898. She has been in the coast service for six years. She was a steamship of 2,262 tons, 280 feet long, and 38 feet beam. The Princess Victoria was commanded by Captain P. J. Hickey.

A Thrilling Escape. One of the thrilling escapes was that of Miss Claire Burr, a Seattle school teacher, en route for Ketchikan. Her rescue was due to some one on the Princess Victoria throwing a rope, and to the fact that George Peterson, of Centralia, first seized the rope and then the school teacher. Both went under, but Peterson gripped Miss Burr with his legs and held the rope. Choking and strangling, they came to the surface and a lifeboat picked them up.

"I got out on deck in a hurry after the crash," Varley said. "It was getting light but the air was thick with fog. I made out, just inward of the Sampson's smokestack, the sharp bow and three smokestacks of a ship—the Princess Victoria, it was—and she had sliced the Sampson half in two."

"We'd been rammed on the starboard side, and as I looked down over the rail, I saw Pete Curfin and Hank Fuller, pals of mine, struggling in the water."

"I threw them a line and got them aboard and we turned to do what we could for others."

Iron Worker a Hero. "Still another iron worker—there were 20 in our party, and all bound for a job in Juneau—called to me that there was a man caught on the bow of the Princess Victoria, which had worked loose somewhat from the Sampson."

"We looked over and down and saw the poor fellow caught in wreckage which hung to the anchor chain of the Victoria. The wreckage was afire."

"The first thing I knew one of the men had pushed the end of a rope into my hands and was dropping over the side. I lowered him. The man below was caught fast, and though we tugged and tugged we couldn't get him free."

"We saw the fire creep up on him. His clothes began to burn. Then his hair caught fire."

"For God's sake, shoot me," he begged, "I can't stand it."

"His flesh began to burn, and when I saw his rescuers' pants catch fire, I pulled him up, though he protested. Later they got the man up, but he was dying."

Captain Goes With Ship. "The bow of the Princess towered high over the deck of the Sampson, and we were helping the crew of the Princess hoist passengers to her deck."

"By and when all the women nearby had been lifted up to the Princess Victoria, we men climbed aboard. We were none too soon, for the Sampson turned her nose down into the water and made as pretty a dive as you ever saw. There was not any splash to speak of."

IDDINGS FUNERAL TODAY.

The funeral services of Carl Elmer Iddings, who was killed in an automobile accident Friday in Boise, Idaho, will be held this afternoon from the chapel of Lehman & Clough.

The body was brought to Boise at 6 o'clock Sunday night and taken to the Elks club, where services were held Monday afternoon. Joseph Perrault, Jr., accompanied the body to Salem.

In line with the plan of Salem people to keep interest alive in the Chautauqua, another Chautauqua circle was formed today with Mrs. Florin Von Eschen at the head.

Benjamin Brick brought suit in the circuit court today asking that an injunction be granted preventing John F. Enright or Olive S. Enright from interfering with him as manager of the Plymouth clothing store or from refusing him access to the books of the company. It is alleged in the complaint that Brick was hired as manager of the store when they took over the stock of Oscar Johnson. He claims he was to have the entire management of the store but that recently the Enrights have been interfering with his management.

As far as the justice of the peace court is concerned, the Brick-Enright case is closed. Judge Webster this afternoon closed the case by fining Enright $10 for the assault he made on Brick last week in the Plymouth clothing store. The attorney for Enright appeared in court today and pleaded guilty to the charge in behalf of the defendant.
