50 YEARS: Couple nearly divorced many years ago

having to be right and being pissed off.”

The couple still has that fire — and that means they still argue. Zoe has a hard time, at least initially, with that “meet in the middle” thing.

“I don’t meet in the middle in the beginning at all,” she says. “Then my mind works a little and I go, ‘if I was him, I guess I’d feel that way, too.’”

It all comes down to communication.

“You always feel good that you’re being heard,” Zoe said.

“We talk a lot.”

As his temperament demands, Bill has developed his approach into a “practice,” a kind of prayer of “love, acceptance, compassion and forgiveness.”

And age and experience have, as they do for most folks, weeded out some of the trivial reasons for conflict.

“A lot of that bullshit is out of the way,” Zoe says. (Bill said she was unplugged).

So, despite putting carts before horses all their lives, and despite their passionate natures clashing and sparking, the Willitts have, in fact, never given up. And they celebrated last month in Hawaii, with their family on hand to bear witness to their willingness to “meet in the middle.”
