ASPIRE: More volunteers are needed for mentor program

Kroytz said each mentor is paired with three or four students with whom they meet throughout the students' junior and senior years. Volunteers bring a range of experience to the program. Kroytz said they include lawyers, retired school teachers and administrators, parents, fire industry personnel and more.

The program is about 10 years old at Sisters High School, and is district-funded this year, after being funded by grants in the past. The change allows Kroytz to spend a greater portion of his day on ASPIRE than before.

Students with an interest in the military usually are paired with mentor Brett Hoyt, now retired from the U.S. Navy. He said countries such as Germany have well-defined paths to a university educator or trade school, with students deciding which course to follow early in their secondary school years.

American schools don't have such a formalized process, Hoyt said, but ASPIRE serves the purpose.

"We work with these kids and encourage them," he said. "We are helping them through this journey."

Hoyt, a second-year mentor, knew he wanted a military career early on.

However, he said most students don't have a clear idea of what profession they want. That's where the ASPIRE mentors become valuable, shaping the options around each student's interests.

Hoyt said he is enjoying the role and likes giving back to the community by volunteering.

Sisters High School students and parents have a couple of opportunities in early October to learn more about colleges — and how to pay for attending them. The Central Oregon College Fair is scheduled from 9 to 11:30 a.m. on Thursday, October 6, at Redmond High School. A bus will be chartered from Sisters to the fair and back for $5 per person if at least 25 students sign up.

On Tuesday, October 18, the high school will hold Financial Aid Night for seniors and their parents. It begins at 6:30 p.m. at the Student Service Center and will cover how to apply for financial aid, including federal student aid, and other topics.

Kroytz said it's all part of doing the most possible to prepare students for their next step. ASPIRE is always looking for more volunteers, he added.

"The more mentors we have, the more successful the program can be," Kroytz said. "It's not so much about our knowledge as it is about our desire to help kids find success after high school."

For more information contact the school at 541-549-4045.

Central Oregon cities weigh proposals to pave way for Uber

BEND (AP) — City officials in Bend and Redmond are looking to entice Uber to town by changing city ordinances that would pave the way for ride-sharing services.

The Bulletin reports that both cities are looking into additional and changes to city code that would make it easier for transportation network companies to establish businesses.

Both Redmond and Bend will see proposals related to ride sharing before the city council in October.

Uber spokesman Jon Isaacs says Redmond will be the key to the company's Central Oregon services, as most of the requests for service the company receives are from people who have arrived at the Redmond Airport.

Lyft is also looking to expand in Oregon, if legislation passes to make it easier for the service to operate.
