

MENTORS: New mentors are always welcome to serve

always welcome.

“We’re training five new mentors this week,” Newport said.

Circle of Friends Program Director Kelly Davis Martin described the qualities sought in a mentor:

“A good volunteer mentor has the internal passion to make a difference in the life of a child. They know the value of having a strong relationship in one’s life and want to build that relationship with a child. They bring their time and their presence, but they also come into the relationship ready to give and to receive. They are not there to tell the child what to do, or to have all of the answers. They are there to help the child uncover their own strengths, values and goals. Great mentors build strong, trusting relationships based on mutual respect, open communication and connection to uncovering what the child needs to grow and thrive.”
