One contested position for school board

By Jim Cornelius

News Editor

Voters will vote on three positions for the five-member Sisters School Board in the May 16 election.

Incumbent Amanda Clark and school bond oversight committee member Jay Wilkins are running unopposed. Position 2 is a contest between Nicki Gregg and David Wentworth. Gregg is a parent, teacher and budget committee member; Wentworth is a parent of a Sisters Middle School student co-founder of a renewable energy business.

Gregg asserts that, "It is important to have someone on the board that has teaching experience in a public school classroom. My experience as a parent in our schools and my background as a teacher makes me uniquely qualified for this position."

Wentworth noted that when he and his wife moved from Connecticut, they questioned whether Sisters schools "could 'compete' with some of the (arguably) best public schools in the nation. Those questions have been answered through the quality of the teaching, diversity of programs, and the broader community's commitment to excellence."

Wentworth says that "My objective is bring to the Sisters School Board a combination of practical experience

Ethan Hosang is becoming well-known around Sisters as he is frequently spotted by residents out running the roads and trails around town.

Saturday morning the eighth-grader took to the streets of Sisters along with over 70 other half-marathoners in the Sisters 'Better Half' Marathon and pulled off the unexpected: He won the race!

And it wasn't as though he ran a lackluster time in a noncompetitive race. Hosang crossed the line in 1:20:21, a time for 13.1 miles that most runners can only dream of achieving. To put into perspective his pace of 6:08 per mile, that same pace would result in a 19-minute 5-kilometer finish, a 38-minute 10-kilometer finish, and a

"He caught the leader in the last three miles of the race and just pushed on to the finish," said Josh Nordell, also of Sisters, who finished the 6.55-mile race in 42:37, a winning 6:30-mile pace.
