To the Editor:
Are you going to investigate why the Forest Service waited several days to tackle the Milli Fire?

It was a small blaze and could have been put out easily. Now the folk festival is cancelled, school is out, and local businesses are suffering.

Darin Burgstahler

To the Editor:
We would like to express our heartfelt thanks to the Sisters Folk Festival Board of Directors, its working directors, and employees for their handling of a truly rotten situation.

Many days of angst and deliberation preceded the ultimate decision to cancel the festival. We're positive that it wasn't arrived at lightly or easily, but it was the right decision to make. The forecast for improved air quality over the weekend itself had to have made the decision even tougher. However, a forecast is just that... a forecast, not a known.

Even bigger than that is set-up. A lot of people may not realize how extremely complex and labor-intensive the festival infrastructure is. It starts actively on Wednesday afternoon, and continues all day Thursday and Friday, with hundreds and hundreds of man-hours required for the festival to come off "seamlessly" every year. Those were the days of our absolute worst air quality, so there was no question that it just wasn't possible.

It was a sad, sad weekend for our whole community. What can we do to help at this point? Patronize all the local restaurants and businesses as much and as often as possible! We all need each other.

Nike to lay off 490 Oregon workers

PORTLAND (AP) — Nike officials say the company will lay 490 Oregon workers by the end of the month.

The Oregonian/OregonLive reports the layoffs are part of the 2 percent of the workforce Nike plans to eliminate worldwide. In July, the Nike laid off 255 Oregon workers, and plans to cut another 490 local jobs by September 30 for a total of 745 jobs lost in the state.

News of the layoffs comes months after Nike announced a broad restructuring of the footwear manufacturing company. Nike is the largest company headquartered in Oregon, near Beaverton. It employs 74,000 people worldwide.
