

SHELTER: Staff meeting with neighbors over concerns

shelter, Gary Eidsmoe, told The Nugget, “I think the main concern for the neighbors is why do we have the shelter in close proximity to neighborhoods and schools, and we will explain this as best as possible.”

A professional facilitator will provide coordination for the evening to ensure the conversations stay on topic and civil.

Organizers are hopeful to also have representatives from Shepherd’s House (the fiscal agent for the shelter), the Deschutes County Sheriff’s Office to talk about their experience with the unhomed, and Sisters District Ranger Ian Reid or Fred Perl, the USFS law enforcement officer. Perl has frequent contact with shelter guests and others who live in the surrounding forest.

For the month of February, the SCWS is located at the Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration. Earlier it was housed at The Hangar belonging to Sisters Community Church and at Westside Church.

ARREST: Man was restrained for safety, though force not used

According to police, an investigation revealed that Bulloch contacted a High Country Disposal garbage truck driver and requested to use a phone. After the phone call, police say, a family member arrived and was assaulted and strangled by Bulloch.

The garbage truck driver attempted to intervene but was also allegedly attacked. The driver retreated to the safety of her garbage truck; Bulloch then allegedly attempted to get into the cab of the garbage truck through the driver’s window, hitting and slapping at the driver.

Officers arrested Bulloch,

a Sisters-area resident. While police reports state that drug use is believed to be a contributing factor in the incident, Bulloch’s father, Brad Bulloch, told The Nugget that he has seen blood work done after the incident and he is adamant that no drugs were involved. Brad Bulloch told The Nugget that his son was facing mental anguish due to the death of his mother two months before and other pressures associated with relocation and work.

Redmond Police Department reported that they did not use force to arrest Bulloch, but he was placed in a WRAP restraint to ensure his safety and the safety of officers. Bulloch was taken to St. Charles Redmond for an evaluation before being taken to the Deschutes County Adult Jail on multiple charges.
