DOLSON: Trophy honors skill and respect for sport of vintage racing

one-time editor and publisher of The Nugget — told his hometown paper that he is “honored and humbled” to have his name on the trophy.

The modern Wemme Trophy has been awarded to Renny Watt, Norm Daniels, Greg Baldwin, John Zupan, Tim Scott, Monte Shelton, Paul Ingram, Bob Ames, David Franks and Arnie Loynin.

“The names on the trophy are names I’ve respected for years,” Dolson said. “To be on the trophy with them is quite an honor. There are others in the paddock who represent the goals and the values of the Wemme even more than I — but I am honored and humbled to be named.”

Zurschmeide was instrumental in the resurrection of the Wemme Trophy — originally awarded in 1909 and named after E. Henry Wemme, a Portland-based industrialist of the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

“He owned the first several cars in Portland,” Zurschmeide said. “And later he owned the first airplane in Portland, too.”

Wemme sponsored a trophy for the third Rose Cup, Zurschmeide explained.

“The race took place on public roads between Portland and Gresham,” he said.

Bert Dilley won that race.

As the centennial approached, the Rose Cup Committee re-commissioned the Wemme Trophy in 2009, with the orientation of the award to honor lifetime achievement and promotion of the values of sportsmanship and honorable competition.
